Introduction.

This volume of the yearly publication of the University makes its appearance with a new title, "THE CHERRY TREE." After the sale of the University property at the head of the Mall, whose location inspired the last name of the annual, "THE MALL" was deemed inappropriate as a title for the book, and on this account the Board of Editors selected the present title, suggested by Mr. Leon Lawrence Lewis, of the College of Political Sciences, as one more suggestive of the University, and more appropriate for a publication of this character.

This, as has been intimated above, inaugurates the third series of the University yearbook, the first having been published by the graduating class of Columbian College, from 1898 to 1904, under the name of "THE COLUMBIAD." Beginning with the number for 1905, and until this year, it has been called "THE MALL."

To make this volume a true and attractive record of all the happenings that make valuable to memory the retrospect of an University life has been the constant endeavor of the Board.

In conclusion, it seems fitting to express our especial appreciation of the material aid rendered us in issuing this volume by those contributors whose names are here inscribed:

JOHN E. LIND,
MISS MYRLE CAMERON,
PHILIP R. HOOTEN,
MEADE BOLTON,
WILLIAM D. LAMBOURNE,
HARRY S. AMES,
MISS E. M. SCHAFER,
ALAN BACHRACH.

TO

DEAN WILLIAM ALLEN WILBUR

TH.S BOOK IS DEDICATED AS A SLIGHT APPRECIATION OF HIS UNSELFISH
DEVOTION TO THE CAUSE OF THE UNIVERSITY, AND AS A TOKEN OF THE RESPECT AND ESTEEM IN WHICH HE IS HELD BY THE

A Toast.

Up, one and all! We'll drink a toast.
Here's to the school we love the most,
Here's to the school of which we boast,
George Washington!

In after years when far away
From Alma Mater we must stray,
Remember her we pledge today,
George Washington!

Then fill the goblets to the brim!
To her our praise, to her our hymn,
May never time her glory dim,
George Washington!

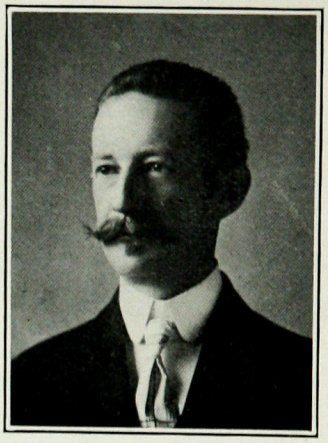
David A. Molitor.

Michigan.



The Right Honorable Mr. Molitor hails from Detroit, Mich., where he first saw the light in 1866. After finishing a course in Civil Engineering at Washington University, St. Louis, Mr. Molitor sailed for Europe, having accepted an appointment from the German Government as Engineer on the construction of the Strategical Railway, Weizen Immendingen, in the Grand Duchy of Baden. When this railroad was completed he spent four months traveling in Switzerland, Austria, Holland, etc., and returned to the United States convinced that G. W. U. was the only University which could perfect his education. Molitor has had charge of many important engineering projects throughout the country and has distinguished himself by his voluminous papers on this subject. In view of his wonderful achievements and appreciating his position among famous men of the world, the faculty granted him a B.S. in February and will hand him a C.E. in June.

The Gateway.

Firm upon the Hill of Knowledge,
Gateway to your life I stand,
I, your Alma Mater, bearing
Destiny within my hand.

Lo! the future lies before you,
A dream-city on the heights,
And its turrets beck'ning to you
Fill with hopes your days and nights.

Stately gardens, gleaming rivers,
Castles rearing moated walls,
Shining through the drifting dream-clouds,—
Clouds on which the sunlight falls;

These you glimpse from out my shadow
Where the golden key is found,
That shall open all the portals
Ignorance believes iron-bound.

From my arches winds your pathway,
There Love, Tears, and Laughter wait,
As, the freighted years advancing,
Nearer draw the halls of Fate.

Gray and somber midst young splendors,
Weary with long years I stand,
Yet you'll not forget the gateway
Leading to your Promised Land.

Senior Historical Alphabet.

"A" stands for Axinelochos, a club of the past,
"B" stands for Baccalaureate, the lecture we hear last;
"C" stands for the Class of 1908,
A bunch of fine scholars now left to their fate;
"D" stands for Dance, the best of the year,
"E" for the Eleven, which the "Sophies" did fear;
"F" for the Faculty, we handled so rough,
"G" stands for Gates, an enormous big bluff.
"H" for the Hatchet, our source of hot air,
"I" for our Industry, with which none can compare.
"J" stands for Juniors, so grand and so stately,
"K" for the Knowledge we've taken on lately.
"L" stands for Life and also for Light,
The two are possessions of the Senior so bright.
"M" stands for Meeting, the first that was held,
When the belligerent Sophs were so gloriously felled.
"N" for dear Needham, our noble President,
Whose time and good money for new buildings was spent?
"O" for Omega, which signifies last,
It means the exams which all of us passed.
"P" stands for Prom, a great big success,
The memory of which we cannot suppress.
"Q" stands for Quorum, which never was known,
Except at elections when anxiety shone.
"R" for the Rush, where we administered defeat,
"S" for the Sympathy we placed at their feet.
"T" stands for Trustees, so unconsciously wise,
"U" for the University, they nobly supervise.
"V" stands for Veditz, the Senior's pride.
"W" for Wisdom, for which we strive.
"X" stands for X-cellence, in which we X-cell,
"Y" stands for Youth, which trouble will quell.
"Z" stands for Zeal, a virtue true,
And ever remember "This one thing I do."

What is it? A juxtaposition of the incongruous; in other words—a joke. Not Ball, but the picture. Ballie is not himself fond of society, but he says, "it's awfully fond of me." After he left Western, this self-made man matriculated at G. W. U. and has since been identified with the football team in the capacity of general supervisor and rubber.

The likeness opposite is symbolical of all that is beautiful and kind. Not only is she the greatest logician since the days of Aristotle, for she can make the most conceited admit he's a fool, but she is witty. Grace lives at the Congressional Library. She's "terribly busy," hasn't time enough even to grow old. Possesses a smile so radiant that it would force a gooseberry bush into flower.

Harold's first war whoop was in Norristown, Pa. His second was in Washington, at the age of five, when he entered kindergarten. Stonebuster later graduated from Eastern, then got mixed up in the patent business and entered G. W. U., from which he has a premonition of receiving a B.S.

Mrs. Triepel, the dean of the class, was born somewhere in N. C., in the 19th Century. She was called to Washington to assist in taking care of Uncle Sam's money, and not knowing how else to spend her own entered G. W. U. She's a finished lady, i.e., has no aim in life except to live; is not fond of society only to hear people talk; she is not easily excited over the great crises of the day.

At first Turk was exceedingly fond of society, but when a stuffed ballot box made him manager of the Track Team, he abandoned it, preferring the degenerating influence of the track to the elevating atmosphere of the fairer sex. But he has now returned to his original ideas, with particular application.

Extracts from the Journal of G. W. U., 1910.

September 25, 1907.

Today I sought once more my old haunts at 15th and H, but things seemed changed. I found that around the corner are some other buildings that the faculty have put at my disposal, although of course I shall permit the other classes to pass through the halls if they are quiet. Many of my molecules of last year, attracted by green fields and campuses new, have separated from me; even my president and treasurer, finding their duties too heavy, have left me, absconding with most of my debts.

September 30.

I actually caught a glimpse of 1911 on his way from one dark corner to another. Such a shy and retiring disposition is almost painful. He saw me, however, and fled unceremoniously—surely not in terror!

October 7.

I studied a little bit today. Much of my time lately has been taken up with selling books at twice their original value to the poor Freshman, who by the way is much poorer than he was.

October 14.

I called a class meeting and my molecules elected a few new officers to look after me. Many things were decided on which are to increase my glory.

October 16.

I went to Fall Convocation, although most of my molecules seemed to be busy.

October 23.

1911 is very impudent. He has published a few impertinent posters in defiance of those which I made for him. Now, if they had been like the ones I wrote last year!

November 6.

Lately there has been a feeling that college functions have been lacking in good management, so I had another class-meeting and decided to show the other classes how a dance should be given.

November 10.

I played football with little 1911 yesterday. He certainly has a lot to learn about football; but, then, he is so painfully young. The paper gave a pretty good account of the game.

Soph Win.

Score 10-0.

Yesterday afternoon at Van Ness Field the Sophomore Class of George Washington University met the Freshmen on the football field. From the beginning it was evident on which side the true skill was, and this game should ever stand out as a Gibraltar in the history of the Class of 1910.

Although the Class of 1910 could muster some fifteen regular students only, and some of these were incapacitated because of injuries, the Sophs. not only presented a complete team on the field, but one capable of administering defeat to the large and green opponents sent out against them. The game was replete with excellent playing and interesting situations. At one point a halt in the proceedings was called, and the captains of the two teams were seen to consult together for a short time. A moment later the twelfth Freshman left the line of scrimmage and walked sadly off the field.

A little later the Sophs. made a safety, but the referee, in the kindness of his heart, refused to allow the score, more as a matter of encouragement to the dispirited beginners than as a compliment to the skill of the Sophomores. When at last the game was finished and the news scattered abroad, a feeling of joy filled the hearts of the distant classmates that centuries can never erase. The score was 10-0.

December 7.

My dance came off last night, and I feel that my reputation is in no danger. I don't want to say much, but it was a pretty fine dance, equaled only by the one I gave last year.

December 10.

At last I can breathe freely for a time. My debts are all paid! With the ready assistance of my molecules I managed to pull through the recent financial crisis with but little difficulty.

January 3, 1908.

I had to return to college again. How can they expect me to do anything? I was out every night until morning all through the holidays and my head aches terribly. Don't care much about studying, anyhow.

January 13.

The mid-year exams were posted today and that means work. No more time wasted in wandering around the corridors now or strolling from I to 15th and H streets. No more merry life! Merely grind until the first of February, and then—well, then I will forget the past weeks of misery and be merry again.

To work!

History of the Class of 1911.

THE Freshman Class of '11, arived at the University with a large, elegant and accurate estimate of its own superiority gained in a struggle for supremacy in the schools from which we had all graduated with high honors. But in our wisdom we knew the sad fate of many a Freshman Class, so we were prepared for the worst, and we found it,—the Sophomores!

Of course when everyone told us we were the finest class the College had ever seen, we of sound judgment and good taste were obliged to admit that we were the greatest ever. Imagine our disgust and contempt, when those pitifully weak and minute Sophomores dared to issue orders, extremely insulting and presumptious, considering the source, which if not obeyed to the letter by the Freshman would be followed by dire destruction at their hands; poor, little, harmless creatures that couldn't have hurt us, if we had really been the infants they called us.

Before the usual game on the gridiron took place, we decided, if possible without arousing suspicion, to let the "powerful Sophs" have the game. We knew that our Freshman on the regular team were pulling all the honors in the football line, so merely to show our respect to our superiors in age, (though in nothing else), we agreed to try and cancel some of our successes in favor of the Class of 1910. Having made up our minds to this, we of course did exactly as we intended, which we always do, and gave the game away.

Shortly after this, we scored a big success in our Freshman dance. The committees did fine work, and every feature of the dance was delightful, even the refreshments, which for once were all there, the Sophs' thieving fingers having been frustrated by the clever strategy of our far-sighted Vice-President.

The mid-yea exams., dreaded even by the Seniors, those wise and learned creatures whom we all view with such deep respect, found us ready as usual. We emerged with brows unruffled. Several of our number even secured "A's" in Math. under Professor Peck. What greater test could there be of our brilliancy?

We are now gathering strength for next year. We hope that the Class of 1912 will be an antagonist worthy of our steel. But it is doubtful. History does not repeat itself in George Washington even in Mr. Peake's classes. (He does it for us.)

DIVISION OF ARCHITECTURE

GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY

TO show the true advancement of the Division of Architecture it becomes necessary to look backward into the dim past. In the peanut gallery of the Main Building, at the corner of Fifteenth and H streets, the students of Architecture first stumbled over cairns, fell into mastabos and climbed the pyramids of Egypt. The next step landed the Knights of the Compass into a magnificent time-eaten old relic, a treasure in the eye of the ever watchful architect, at 813 Fifteenth street. This rare old pile of clay tablets probably out-dated the Lion gate of Mycenæ by fifty years. It is unfair to fix the date beyond this, as it may be misleading to the owner. While searching records of repairs, etc., however, this classical structure afforded great opportunities to the student in studying construction. One could examine the joists, flooring, studding, lath and plaster, the settling of walls, the shrinkage of sash and the sag of doors without once leaving the drawing table. In order to make it more clear to those less familiar with our quarters number two, it may be explained thus: It would be absolutely impossible for eleven men, fourteen dogs, and nine cats to catch a single rat in one of the locked rooms in the above-mentioned building, due to so many exits which were about rat size. Here we were introduced to early Greek architecture.

The traditional third move of the Architectural Division so nobly referred to in The Mall of last year, was the move to 729 Fifteenth street, and located about one thickness from the roof and twenty jumps towards the back yard, looking eastward. This was quite a stride in architecture, the students had better room, real desk chairs and an outlook towards the Oxford, which was at all times attractive. The professors, too, would loiter around the windows and fix their eyes toward the horizon of the East to observe the sky lines which were broken by the massive buildings in the distance. These, like the previous architectural rooms, were quite a study along the lines of building necessities. The rooms were bolted together by means of large bars of iron, rammed through the walls and tapped on the interior, with large braces of timber on the exterior resembling the pylons on the temple of Khons. However, this was merely for a safe-guard and not for ornament; it protected the students from trespassing on the neighboring property and finding themselves in an embarrassing position beneath the debris of the above-mentioned building. Here were learned something of the Ionic order.

The fourth, Corinthian. This move takes us down to modern times, early Washington Renaissance. On I street, here, we have the spacious rooms of the entire building, lots of good neighbors, the Engineers, Woman's College, and Education. In connection with our present home the faculty has provided the worthy students with a cosy club room on the fifth floor, counting from the attic downward: this room has been fitted up by the club members in the latest rustic style, with plate rail bedecked with casts, plates, drawings, etc.

'Tis in this retreat where the future building designers have their club meetings, smoke the pipe of peace, assassinate chicken salad, strangle sausage, thaw ice cream, and unravel the most up-to-date yarns, secretly taken from the tomb of Benin Hassan, excavated at Nineveh or washed down the Euphrates by the flood. If the jokes had birth-dates with them, the Sphinx would smile and sink beneath the sands of the desert in disgust. Putting all jokes back in their respective cribs, the students are better organized than ever before.

ARCHITECTURAL CLUB.

The Architectural Club.

IN the year of 1904 the Architectural School of the George Washington University had grown to such proportions that the need of a student organization was keenly felt. Although the field of a general club was already covered by the Washington Architectural Club, it was evident that there would be no conflict with the established organization if the membership of the new club were kept within the student body of the school.

The expressed purpose of the club was to promote the interests of architecture in the University. In pursuance of this object, lectures have been given and competitions have been held at various times, together with many exciting social events, which have had a good effect in bringing the students into closer touch with each other and with the University.

The success and steady growth of the club since its organization has been noted with proper pride by both the student body and the faculty of the Division of Architecture, for it is meet that a school which is fast making itself known as one of the leading architectural schools of the country should have such a progressive and successful organization to promote the welfare of its students.

It was not until the present year, however, that the most pressing need of the club was gratified—the need of a club room. Owing to the spacious quarters in which our traveling School of Architecture has been stationed this year, and the generosity of the University, we have at last been provided with a club room which has been nicely fixed up and furnished through the ceaseless energy of our dear comrade, Lombard, and his assistants, to whom we all owe a rising vote of thanks for their efforts in advancing the interests of the Architectural Club and the students of the Division of Architecture.

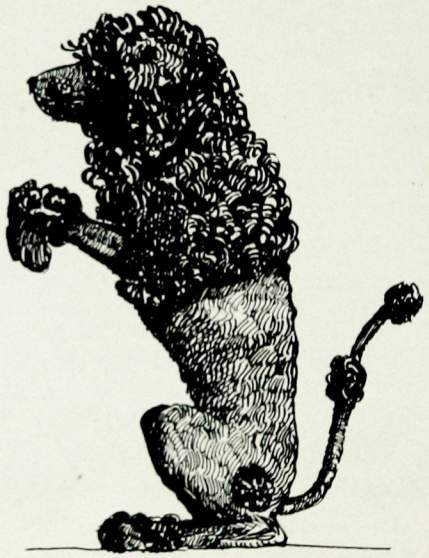
The Calm Before The Storm

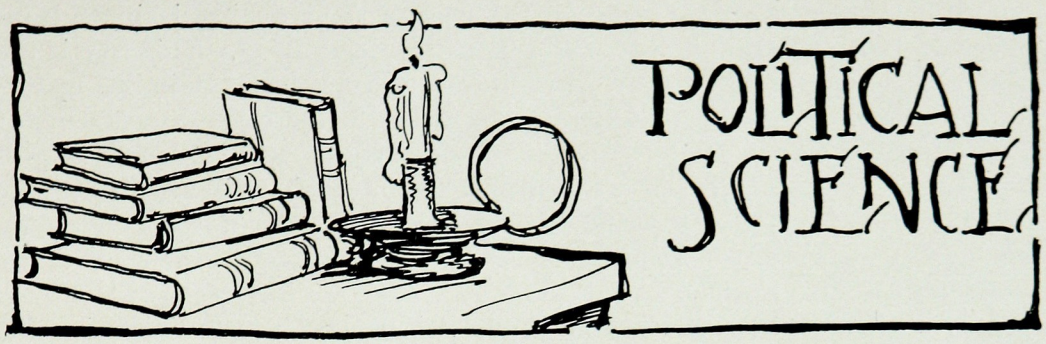
To Our Beloved Freshmen.

Freshmen, Freshmen we have more,
Ten by number, than ever before,
Some are blondes, some are dark,
A few can almost draw a mark;
Some like Cassius, tall and lean,
Most are generous, few are mean;
Their rendering, too, would cause a wink,
They can render, we don't think;
Asking questions, smoking butts,
And chewing gum, that bunch of mutts!
Projections too—they pass it by,
"What is it used for?" "I wonder why?"
In construction their heads are thick,
They don't know granite from a brick;
Superimaginative power is their delight,
But when corrected, no sleep that night;
The library for them bears no charm,
They are afraid it will do 'em harm;
They dodge the "Profs" one and all,
And are not at classes, to answer call;
Some attend with actions creepy,
Inattentive, yawning, drowsy, sleepy;
Of initiation they have a dread,
They leave the club and go to bed.
Come, all ye Freshmen, and with us cheer,
There'll be Freshmen another year.

—W. A. Knowles.



ARCHITECTURAL TAIL PIECE



THE College of the Political Sciences began its first session in the Fall of 1907 under the aggressive administration of Dr. C. W. A. Veditz. It represents the natural development of the Department of Politics and Diplomacy, founded in 1898, and offers both graduate and undergraduate courses.

As the College is necessary to the University and the Preparatory School to the College, so the undergraduate courses of the College of the Political Sciences are essential to the highest development of the graduate courses. The new College has reference not only to this fact, but also to a principle of much greater significance: it means nothing short of an acknowledgment on the part of the authorities, after the most careful and deliberate consideration, that there are other subjects in a college course just as important as Latin and Greek, and Conic Sections, and Calculus; and that, while these subjects should not be relegated to the past, it is altogether possible for a man to have a well-rounded college education and yet not know all the exceptions in Gildersleeve's Latin Grammar, or not be able to calculate correctly every difficult problem in Differential and Integral Calculus; but he must know enough of History, and Economics, and Sociology, and the Modern Languages to make up for it. This means that he must have a fuller conception of the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, and a deeper appreciation of the great laws that, through the ages, have governed the progress of mankind.

If we may be more specific, the College of the Political Sciences has a two-fold purpose: First, it offers complete undergraduate courses leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts, which include "general culture" studies, but give special emphasis to subjects pertaining to Government, History, Economics, Sociology, and the Modern Languages. Secondly, on the basis of this preparatory course, it offers more extended graduate work along those lines suggested by the designation of the original department of "Politics and Diplomacy."

It is not necessary to reiterate the peculiar and distinguishing advantages offered in Washington to students in this department. This city is the seat of the nation's political activity, and as such it affords unlimited opportunities for investigating the complex operations of the three departments of our government, and endless sources of information upon all matters pertaining to its history, much of which is not available elsewhere. If the reader is not a matriculate in this department and desires further testimony as to the unrivaled advantages the Capital City affords, we respectfully refer him to Dr. Veditz.

If it is true that the location and environment largely determine the relative status of educational institutions, this new department of the George Washington University should, in due time, take its place at the head of departments of similar character in the United States. As an indication of the maturity of those entering upon this work, and the rapid development of the department, the class reports thirteen graduates for its first year out of a total enrollment of fifty-five; twenty-four presented college or university degrees on entrance; the average age of the men who have matriculated is twenty-six and one-half years (this average, however, should be recast, as reference to the class roll will clearly explain).

The College, through its official organization, the Social Science Club, has secured the services of a number of prominent speakers and lecturers, among whom we note the following: William J. Bryan, John W. Foster, W. R. Curtis, Dr. Meade, William R. Manning, and Henry P. Willis.

From these facts it may be seen that the College is in the line of progress. The experimental stage has past; now the questions for discussion among the leaders have to do with the perfecting of a system already in successful operation. With its capable administration and efficient faculty there is good reason for the realization of the hopes we have expressed. Let us, as students, be a unit with the faculty in their efforts to raise the College of the Political Sciences of the George Washington University to that position of prominence and leadership among the universities of the country that its first year portends and that it will prove itself to deserve.

Division of Education.

IT has long been recognized that Washington is a particularly suitable place for the training of teachers. As the seat of the Federal Government it is not only the political but also the natural educational centre of the nation. The time has come when enlightened governments realize that education is a public function of vital importance to the welfare of the State. Hence, although its immediate supervision has been left to the several States, the central government ought to have some indirect means of standardizing the education of the whole country.

Washington is indicated as the educational centre of the nation, not only by reason of its being the Federal capital, but also on the ground of its geographical position. Situated on the boundary of the North and South, it is so placed as to exert a powerful educational influence tending to equalize the culture of these two great sections of the country. In the nature of the case, the national capital is free from sectional prejudices, and is therefore peculiarly fitted to be the point from which harmonizing influences shall radiate.

In view of these considerations it is clear that Washington is unsurpassed as a place for the training of teachers. Yet, strangely enough, this magnificent field has remained until the present time unoccupied. There is no strong teachers' college south of New York City. It was with a view of making an appropriate beginning toward the establishment of such a college that the Board of Trustees created the Division of Education. The immediate purpose was two-fold: First, to provide educational courses for teachers; and, secondly, to provide an adequate professional training for undergraduates and graduates.

Teaching is now recognized as a profession requiring special training. Formerly the idea was common that successful teaching is largely a matter of instinct. It is now generally conceded that the teacher must have, in addition to innate ability, supplementary training in the principles and methods of instruction. Such training the Division of Education aims to give.

In pursuance of these aims, a Teachers' Course has been established which is designed to combine general culture with special preparation for teaching. That such a course meets an existing need is manifest from the large number of teachers and others who have been enrolled.

The Game.

HOW, the game may be a big one, or it may be very, very little,—it all depends on the way a man plays it, and also how seriously he takes himself and the rest of the world, but especially himself. And though this sounds like a paradox, the way he plays it depends sometimes on the game itself and sometimes on the stakes. Of course, we all think a man a little the nobler who plays it for the game's sake alone, but the fact remains that those who win out the oftenest are those who keep the stakes in view.

But what troubled Jack Barber, as he strolled aimlessly across the campus, was that he wasn't quite sure just what the stakes were. With chin dropped on his breast, hands rammed into his pockets and his usual jaunty walk changed to a dismal slouch, he meditated miserably on his sins, and the swift retribution that had befallen him. A football reputation, a girl, and still another girl.—(You see, they presented themselves to his mind in the order of their importance.) The reputation was in a class by itself, but the girls!—well, he wasn't the first man who hadn't been able to classify them.

And this was his trouble. Carelessly, but with apparent fervor, he had urged a girl at home to come up for the game, and after many refusals, he had suddenly received a charming note of acceptance. Charming, that is, if it hadn't been for the little but disquieting fact that in the meantime he had invited another girl, who had accepted with flattering promptness. Jeanne always did know what she wanted, he remembered with a reminiscent smile. But now—they were both coming, Edith in the morning, and Jeanne on the train that got in just before the game.

As he strolled along, deep in thought, he nearly ran over a man going in the same direction, who turned on him with an exasperated face.

"What in thun——! Oh, that you, Jack? Why don't you give a fellow warning before you try to knock him down? What's the matter with you, anyway? You look as if you had a grievance."

"Not a grievance, but a deep-rooted grief—two of them, in fact. Look here, Bob, you profess to be a friend of mine. Here's a chance to earn my lifelong gratitude."

"Now, I wonder whether he wants me to lend him a fiver, or hold his hand between halves?" Bob Hemingway addressed a solitary oak beside the walk. "Sounds risky, even at the price. I guess I'll suspend judgment until I've heard the details. What's your trouble?"

Barber explained, and it looked worse and worse to him as he went over the story; so bad in fact, that he wasn't prepared to have his friend collapse with uncontrollable laughter, from which he recovered only to go off into another spasm. Barber tried to look hurt at this unfeeling levity, but catching a sudden glimpse of Bob's face, he, too, broke down, and the two doubled up and shook with helpless mirth.

Jack was the first to return to his woes. "Oh, Bobby, Bobby," he sighed, pulling himself together at last, "what on earth am I to do? Did a perfectly well-intentioned fellow ever get into such a mess? There's only one way out that I can see, and that is for you to take one of them and her mother to the game, and I'll get one of the fellows to take care of the other."

"Well, I like that!" burst out Hemingway. "So I'm to be offered up as the sacrificial lamb. Is the chief priestess pretty?"

"Of course, you satyr. I knew you'd do it, old fellow. Come right along down now; her train's due in fifteen minutes. Oh, Lord, why can't girls know their own minds!"

"My child, you show that yours is but an infantile and irrational one, if you expect consistency from our fair sisters. They are always in two minds, and never in the same mind twice. Oh, come, brace up, man. Play the game."

"Play the game, indeed! That's all very well, but how on earth is a fellow to play it with two queens?" groaned Jack. "Why, it would be 'Check!' all the time."

"Well, you might as well get into the game, for there's the whistle for the first half. We'll have to run for it," said Hemingway, as with a toot and a rush the train came around the curve.

When Edith Whitten and her mother alighted from the train they found two rather flushed but beaming young men eager to show them the sights of the old University town, from the meeting house steeple to the oak where luckless Freshmen had been treed from time immemorial. Edith, a rather stately and condescending girl, yet managed to achieve some little enthusiasm after a hilarious hour or two of sightseeing, and by the time that they turned back towards the hotel Hemingway had decided that his role of cicerone might not be such an arduous one after all. Jack, as he chatted absent-mindedly with Mrs. Whitten, found himself listening with some surprise to her flippant replies to Bob's nonsense, and wondering why he had never noticed before how intolerant she was. Her beauty and self-assured poise had attracted him at first, and he considered now that he really hadn't known her, though he had seen a great deal of her in the previous summer. Suddenly, with an exclamation of dismay, he dived down into his pocket for his watch, and after a hasty glance at it he caught Carter, another college man who had joined them, by the arm.

"I'm awfully sorry," he exclaimed, "but I've a very important engagement at half past two and it's after two now. Er,—something about the game, you know. Hemingway'll look after you and I do hope you'll forgive me and enjoy the game. I'll see you afterwards. Come along, Carter, you're coming with me, you know," and he dragged the astounded youth away before he could protest.

"And, oh, Jack," Edith called after him, "remember that we expect you to cover yourself with glory. You must win."

Jack hardly heard her, as he dashed for the station for the second time that day, explaining to the dazed Carter as they went. Carter, though inclined to be a little indignant at the high-handed way in which he had been appropriated, was glad to be obliging, especially when he saw the eager face and heard the "Oh, Jack, I'm so glad it's the game at last," that greeted his friend.

Jack introduced Carter, and consigned Jeanne and her mother to his tender mercies, not without a little pang of regret, as he wondered how he was going to steal enough time from the dignified beauty to see his chummy friend. He went up town with them, steering them carefully away from the Whittens' hotel, and was beginning to feel more at ease, and even happy, under Jeanne's rapid fire of questions and chat, when he saw Taylor, the coach, bearing down on them with fire in his eye. Hastily he fled, with a fervent "I'll try to see you after the game," in response to Jeanne's "Play the game, and good luck," and he wondered miserably as he hurried to the gymnasium how he was to get out of the hole that he had unwittingly and goodnaturedly dug for himself.

At the gymnasium, as he got into his padded suit, another line of thought took possession of him and another consideration drove the first from his mind. His right shoulder, strained in a previous game, was still weak, and ached sharply as he dragged on the heavy suit. Suppose it should give out? But it couldn't, it must not, for this was the great game and he the man whose clear head and lean strength were expected by friends and enemies to make the greatest gains. But that shoulder! Jack shielded it carefully in the coach and set his teeth when a sudden jolt threw him against the man next him.

Once on the field, surrounded by the vivid, shouting crowds that filled the stands, students, mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, and other fellows' sisters, all overflowing with the good fellowship of a common interest, and the enthusiasm of the moment, he forget his lame shoulder, and punted and caught indifferently, only wishing that the game would begin.

At last, as they crouched waiting for the whistle, and the opposing crowds cheered wildly, from his position at half he glanced with awakened interest at the gray group of men facing them, wondering if they, too, were feeling this sudden fire of excitement that was running through his veins, seasoned campaigner that he was, and making the seconds till the whistle seem ages. At last it came, and with it all conscious thought vanished, its place filled by the unerring, half mechanical judgment and instant decision that marked his usual game.

Steadily they worked, back and forth, now at one end and now at the other, Jack playing with apparently all his old time brilliancy, but somehow a weakness, for which neither his friends or the team could account. Slowly it forced itself upon his own consciousness, and setting his teeth, he plunged forward on the next play with a savage dash that downed the runner before he had made two yards. He brought down the ball, but—had he brought down the whole two teams upon his shoulder, he wondered, as the struggling mass piled up above him. Later, when his own fullback had the ball, he dashed before him, thrusting one man aside with his left arm, and finally went down again, with that maddening right shoulder beneath him.

For the first time he had the awful feeling of inadequacy, that to one skilled in the doing of anything is the most heartbreaking of sensations, and he threw himself frantically into the game, only to feel that they were being steadily pressed back. A black despair seized on him, his old fire seemed gone, replaced by that burning pain in his shoulder, and he felt no surprise, as he saw the white lines slip one by one from beneath his feet, and found, as he dragged himself up after one awful crash, that their goal line had been crossed.

A deadly silence reigned in the stands where sat Edith and Jeanne, and Jack thought bitterly of the times when his name had come rolling down across the field, voiced by a thousand exultant throats, and of what they represented, for which he had given his best strength. The opposing team failed to score on the kick, and with the score 5-0 against them he went back to the bitter work, and it was with a surge of thankfulness that he heard the whistle at the end of the half.

During the intermission he sat apart, his head in his hands and a savage rebellion in his heart against the fate that had ordained that he should play his last game crippled. Back on the field again, he played with a dogged determination that for a while nothing could withstand. He moved with all his old time precision, blocking and interfering and tackling with the trained perfection of a veteran in the game. Once he seemed to weaken again, but a minute later, going down the field under a long low ball, he made a marvelous catch with his left arm, that brought the crowds to their feet. They didn't know that if he had tried to catch it with his right arm he would have dropped it, becasue of that numbing pain in his shoulder. But Jack knew it, and knew that he couldn't do it again, and knew too that with all his splendid strength he was of no use to the team depending on him. There was the Sophomore substitute on the sidelines, eager, half puzzled and half outraged by his hero's failure. He wouldn't give him his place, he would not! There was the ball again—a dive—and missed it again. And Edith, went on some little subconscious corner of his brain, how she would despise him for a "quitter" if he got out of the game while he could yet stand and play. Now a rush towards him which he tried in vain to check. But how could he, he asked himself querelously, when his right arm wouldn't do as his brain commanded. Beneath the tons that lay on that shoulder the little corner of his brain went on working. What was it Jeanne had said last? Play the game? Well, wasn't that what he was doing, and was going to keep on doing, though he couldn't accomplish a thing. But playing the game meant such a lot of things, and playing up to some of them was rather tough work.

They were moving again, and back towards their own goal posts. Play the game! Play the game! How it dinned through one's brain, as if that searing pain were not enough to set a fellow crazy. Was he doing any good here? Wasn't he keeping out a man beetter than he, one who could perhaps save the game for his Alma Mater, for which, after all, he was fighting? Play the game! And he would play it squarely. He walked over to the captain in an interval between plays, and with a brief, "I'm all in," went to the sidelines, and threw himself down on the grass with three kaleidoscopic pictures burned into his brain—the substitute, let loose, throwing himself into the game with the sure strength of perfect physique, the glad crowds above him, and the amazed and disgusted face of Edith Whitten looking at him four rows up in the stand beneath which he lay.

The team, imbued with new confidence by the impetus of the substitute, hurled themselves on that steady gray line before them with renewed hope, and bore them back in short, desperate plays, until the substitute, breaking through, raced thirty yards for a touchdown. 5-5, and thirty seconds to play. But the ball sailed safely between the goal posts, and with the blowing of the whistle, Jack, lying forgotten on the sidelines, knew that he—they had won.

Twenty minutes later, as he sat huddled together in a corner of the gymnasium, not caring to join the jubilant group about the team, hating to rouse himself enough to dress, a friendly arm was laid across his shoulder, and Hemingway's voice, quiet and understanding, brought him to himself.

"The same old shoulder, I suppose, old man?" he said. "That was rather a fine thing to do, Jack, the more that no one will understand. That Miss Whitten went off home in a huff, calling you hard names that I needn't repeat, though I tried to explain. There was an uncommonly attractive little girl just in front of us, though, that seemed mighty interested. I didn't know that Carter was expecting any one up for the game. But we won, man, and you really did it."

He was talking on, trying to pierce the apathy into which his friend had sunk, when a little darky approached them.

"This heah note's foh Mistah Barbah," he said. "Cain't youall tell me wheah he's at?"

Jack reached out and took the note, and in the failing light in the deserted gymnasium, with the shouts and cheers echoing faintly in the distance, he read:

"Dear Jack:—We are staying, you know, at my aunt's. Will you come up tonight and tell me how you 'played the game?'" Jeanne.

Noted for his pleasant smile and gaudy clothing. Educated in Altoona High School and was inveigled into medicine by professional friends. Hails from Altoona, Pa., where he was left by the doctor March 3, 1884. Is unable to decide where he will practice, but the chances are that he will treat "Taenia Solimii" among the Dutch of his native State.

E. D. has but one bad habit—that is his whisper, which sounds like a fog horn at sea. He is from Missouri, and insists upon receiving his prerogative. One of the most universally liked men in the University, as his open-hearted, genial manner has won him many life-long friends. Expects to practice in the west after spending a year in one of the Washington hospitals.

"It's a boy" and other such expressions announced his arrival in King George County, Virginia, August 2, 1885. His aspirations soon centered on medicine, and a course in Emerson Institute completed his preliminary education. "Sleepingitis" has been his chief complaint since his advent in the medical school, but still "exams." have no terror for "Happy." After a P.G. course he will practice in Virginia.

George Matthew Gehringer.

Chose the "City of Brotherly Love" as his birth place five and thirty years ago. Has grown to be a handsome man except for the hairs of his head, which are few and far between. Has tried many ways and means by which he might exist in this cold world, but thought that he might exist a little better with the knowledge which goes with the M. D. Is a mighty independent fellow, but those who come in contact with Doctor Gehringer will find him to be of the pleasant, genial sort.

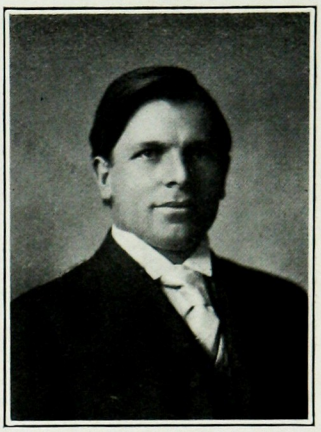
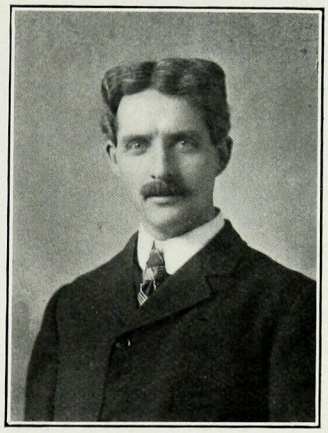
Born in Philadelphia, Pa., October 10, 1883. Is a Pathologist in the Agricultural Department, and the "cut up" of the class, and an active member of the "Rumpus Club.' Hart will practice in Philadelphia, and in leaving George Washington will take the friendship and best wishes of the entire class with him. His smile is worth money, and will gain him many patients.



ARTHUR WILLIAM HEWITT.

Ohio.

This "Buckeye" set up a howl against the rough treatment he was receiving at Mineral, Ohio, April 7, 1878. Arthur spent two years in the University of Ohio studying Electrical Engineering. He began the study of medicine in the A. M. M. C. of Chicago, and joined us at the beginning of his senior year. Has a practice awaiting him in Decatur, Ills., but is considering a call from the Foreign Mission Board.



DANIEL WITTER HIGGINS, JR.

Born February 13, 1876, Maryland-at-large. Dan says he has been "up agin it" for the past year, but has been equal to the occasion and will "make good." Expects to practice in Maryland and will no doubt make a success, as he has a very practical mind, is a hard student, and knows some medicine.

JOHN WILSON HOPKINS.

First exhibited at Chatfield, Minn., during the general patriotic celebration of July 4, 1873. Took his initial dose of medicine at A. M. M. C. in the Windy City, and joined us in his junior year. Taught public school in Minnesota in 1890; was Physical Director, Battle Creek Sanitarium, 1900 to 1906. Has the knack of making friends, and, as Avery puts it, "Even the departed find it difficult to evade his alluring charms."

First came into notice of the medical profession on October 2, 1883, in Detroit, Mich. Was lost to the scientific world during the years of his early education in the public schools of that Western city, but later was seized with the desire to become prominent in medical circles. "Mac" has been connected with the University hospital for three years past, and when it comes to practicable medicine he knows a thing or two. Will "Osler-ize" in the District.

*Junior Class Letter.

Well, old man, it hardly seems possible that you have been away from us for nearly a year, and that the time has rolled around when it is up to me to do the "heavy work" and give you a "spiel" of the doings of the Class of '09 during the present scholastic year. So here goes.

School opened, as scheduled, September 25, 1907, and in the course of a week or so we were "on our way" to successfully (?) master the subjects comprising the third year course. We soon came to realize that we were no longer "Sophs," but mighty "Juniors," in whom our Dean would now find great pleasure (?) in inviting to the hospital clinics. These clinics, along with the instruction in Clinical Medicine at the Emergency Hospital and demonstrations at the Columbia Hospital and in Room No. 2, Medical Building, by Dr. Morse, inclined us to take a new hold on life and feel that we were actually studying medicine, and had a definite and set purpose in view—to get our diplomas, pass the required Board "exams"—and then administer the "dope" to the sick and wounded.

Our election of Class Officers for the year took place at "the same old stand," Fritz Reuter's, on Friday evening, October 25th. Upon calling the roll, it was found that the following members (only four) had in some manner, or for some reason, deserted us:

Mann, Victor Llewellyn,	Michigan.
Nelson, Cyrus William,	Oklahoma.
Orrison, Lloyd Foster,	Virginia.
Teeter, Frank Irvin,	Missouri.

But this did not decrease the strength of our Class, for we had the pleasure of welcoming into our midst seven men, namely:

Chichester, Harry Denison,	Texas.
Neail, Howard W.,	New York.
Weidemann, Clarence Conrad,	District of Columbia.
Willis, Henry Clay,	North Carolina.
White, Gershom Franklin,	Ohio.
Mata, Carlos,	Costa Rica.
Beale, K. F.	District of Columbia.

The early part of the evening was spent in the usual way. Jokes were told (Wood's was fierce, and before we finished with him, he fully realized that it would have been much better if it had only been left untold), and our newly married class-fellow, Watson William Eldridge, Jr., "knocked the piano silly," while the rest of the bunch hashed a few songs.

*In explanation the Editor desires to say that he has deviated somewhat from the "write-ups" of previous years, and has written his in the form of a letter supposedly to a student who went through the Sophomore year, but did not return for the Junior year.

I didn't know at the time, but I should say it must have been somewhere around 10 o'clock when our retiring President, Charles Hardy Fair, called the meeting to order and proceeded to elect officers.

Our old college chum from Ohio, "Prodigiosus," alias "Keeley" McKnight, along with several others, was nominated for President, and finally "won by a neck." "Close shave," but it isn't a bad thing for a fellow once in a while.

"Pat" Clark, he who is the pride of the G. M. H., and hails from Penn's State, was lifted bodily and placed in the Vice-President's chair.

When it came time to vote for a Secretary, the names of "Buster" McEnery and "Yank" French were mentioned, and after much debating and due deliberation, it was decided to let the "Yank" hold down the job. It afterwards proved to be a wise choice (?), as was demonstrated in a class recitation, when the quiz master asked our "minute-man" a question and then followed it up by requesting him to "dilate on it." Well, Frenchy being a man of few words didn't dilate, nor has he been guilty of any such stunt in the minute book. However, I do not doubt but that he has all necessary "dope" contained therein, so I will pass on to the election of the Treasurer.

Well, "Buster" had the whole bunch "skinned a city block" when it came to a "show down." (Incidentally, he is very much wrapped up in a little game familiarly known as "show down.") Somebody shot the "con" at the fellows by telling what a great collector "Buster" is, and the whole bunch were taken in. (Evidently that party must have been thinking how he used to work his way past "Buster" when he took up tickets at the games played down at old Van Ness.) Not one of the fellows is sore on himself for casting his vote for "Mac," and I suppose it is due to the fact that he hasn't been around as yet to do any collecting.

The next office to be filled was that of Class Editor to the University's annual publication, which, by the way, has been changed, in name, from "The Mall" to "The Cherry Tree." Well, somehow or other, I managed to get wise to the title by a single vote, and am therefore in duty bound to sting you with this long, tiresome, boring, dreamy, and perhaps uninteresting bunch of dope. If you feel that you are not sufficiently and wholly satisfied with this so-called "dope sheet," kindly pour forth your troubles to our worthy President, "Prodigiosus," alias "Keeley" McKnight, and request him to see that some other—a more proficient and eloquent slang artist—is designated to "hit the trolley-wire" for you the next time.

The last position to be filled was that of Class Editor to The Hatchet, and since Wood takes such an interest in the paper and all of the University's life and doings, except his own studies, we deemed him a good and worthy man (?) for the position. To illustrate that what I have just said is true, as far as his studies are concerned, I recall a morning about eight or ten weeks after we had resumed this college year, when "Woodsie," as he is popularly called, walked into class about one-half (½) hour late, leaned over to one of the fellows near him, and said: "Is that Dr. ——— lecturing?" Well, the name he mentioned did not belong to the professor lecturing, without giving any names. (Just sort of stinging him a little for mentioning me in The Hatchet on numerous occasions during the year.)

The officers all being elected and duly installed, the meeting was adjourned, and "we didn't get home until morning." But that was not half bad.

Oh! I came very near forgetting to tell you that we certainly did "hit up" the dried leaves of Nicotiana Tabacum as well as the "duck;" at least, most of us did. Why the others did not I cannot say, but maybe this little clipping will throw the "light of wiseness' on the subject:

I never smoke, that is a vice
That's harmful and offensive,
And then cigars are high in price;
And good ones are expensive.
I wouldn't care for that a bit,
But smoking—don't deny it—
Is for a decent man unfit,
It makes me sick to try it.

I drink no alcoholic brew
Or any distillation.
My stomach's rather weak, it's true,
And prone to irritation.
In any case, though, that excess
For years I have been scorning,
It's really awful the distress
I suffer the next morning.

I don't thing dissipation's right—
In any form I hate it.
I live just like an anchorite,
With swelling pride I state it.
Of vice severely I can speak
And where I see it brand it,
For I have such a poor physique
I know I cannot stand it.

The usual symptoms of languor and mental hebetude predominated the class until one bright January morning, when there appeared upon the medical horizon a group of embryonic "Knights of the Lancet," who, inspired by the achievements of one of the foremost apostles of Surgery, had, in the wee small hours of the previous night, organized "The J. Ford Thompson Surgical Society."

Our friend and class-fellow, Gochenour, has kindly consented to write it up. He is "all to the good," when it comes to such a stunt, so I will not intrude by saying anything more, except that a copy shall certainly follow this letter.

We are now winding up the year, so to speak, and a hard one at that, for we have included in our course:

Practice, by	Dr. Ruffin.
Surgery, by	Drs. Wellington and Sowers.
Obstetrics, by	Dr. King.
Gynecology, by	Dr. Bovee.
Therapeutics, by	Dr. Claytor.
Medical Jurisprudence, by	Dr. Woodward.

It is my earnest hope that each and every member of this Junior Class will be members of next year's Senior Class, and since my personal desires seem to run that way I think it wise to cut this letter a little short, and settle down for a few hours of study before the clock strikes the betwitching hour of midnight.

So now to wind up with a few personals:

Did you ever hear that joke on "Buster" about a certain time he went out driving? Well, it is certainly creamy, but I must leave it to him to put you wise. (Of course, I doubt if he will tell you.)

One of our men, who is in a hospital, holding down the job of Resident Student (W. F. McL.) tells me that a party was taking a history from a patient, and wrote in part as follows:

"Profuse perspiration, skin hot and dry."

Now, just imagine a person in such a condition—perspiration profuse, and at the same time the skin hot and DRY. I believe that party's name begins with M, but since he is a good friend of mine, I will refrain from mentioning it. That's going some, huh! old man?

It's hardly "Fair" for me to talk about a fellow in a too personal manner, but I can't help from mentioning that one of our men started to raise a mustache, but he "felt down and out"—it went.

They tell me that Sam Pole is a regular pool shark, and with the assistance of his protege, Lind, manages to pass his time away between and during studies, very pleasantly. (As to the truth of this, I am not prepared to say, but to quote Washington Irving, "merely advert to it for the sake of being precise and authentic.")

"Jimmy" Kavanaugh has made quite a hit with a certain package of femininity, measuring about five feet two inches. But "Kav" keeps her guessing between Frat dances. Oh! yes, he's gotten to be quite a Social Bud. Ask him what his pet expression is.

With best wishes for the future, and hoping to give you a more interesting account next year of each individual member of the class, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

Class Editor, 1907-08.

P. S.—In the meantime you can get some idea of the condition of some of the members of the Class by looking over the inclosed chart.

Class History.

IN the balmy days of last year's spring the Class of 1910 emerged from the larval state of Freshmen to the chrysalis form of Sophomores—steps toward that winged state of wisdom observed in our predecessors. At least such was our opinion of our developmental status. But, as an old school history says of the Indians, who thought that the Spanish ships were white winged birds from heaven, "how sadly and how soon were those simple savages undeceived." Early in the year we found that the winged creatures into which it must logically be supposed we were developing were of a different type, and that we had not advanced so far on the way; in other words we were denominated goose eggs.

The history of our year? Chiefly one of hard and unremitting toil; for he who would master the mysteries of the protein molecule and the life history of the pathogenic bacteria, in addition to struggling with the ever present problems of the nutrition—and tuition—of man, has little time for the practice of that highly valued theraputic measure, relaxation.

To be sure our labors have been lightened from time to time by that joy known only to the searcher after truth when he lights upon some new or long-hidden fact that may benefit humanity or extend the bounds of knowledge. Such facts have been developed at various times, notably by the gentleman from South Carolina who discovered that the chief factor in the etiology of hay fever is the hay bacillus, the foreign member who gravely informed the class that "scaling is taking the weight of substances," and our esteemed colleague from another Southern State, who resuscitated a hypothetical patient grievously suffering from atropin poisoning by the administration of coffee "hypodermically or otherwise."

And then there were cold and dreary mornings when sleep and rest appealed more to tired nerves than even the acquisition of learning, and certain laggard members of the class came late or not at all. Of the lore dispensed in these morning lectures we cannot speak, except that we have been told by those whose veracity we do not question that it made a more vivid impression than anything else we have had so far.

Just by way of demonstrating our originality we began the year by refraining from the usual Freshman-Sophomore difficulty. We have heard it intimated by our friends, the upper class men, that this course was adopted because of the superior muscular development and greater numbers of the incoming class, but these base insinuations we must repudiate as being without foundation in fact.

Of course we had a class smoker. What year—at least in a medical school—would be complete without a class smoker, those harbingers of sunny days—

"For it's always fair weather
When good fellows get together."

It is then that such difficulties as attend college life are all forgotten, when fraternal feeling and good fellowship reign supreme, when all life's hardships vanish behind a mist of blue smoke rings, when wit and eloquence and other things flow freely—so they say.

Thus the year has passed, with a little play, a good deal of work, and more or less weariness of flesh and vexation of spirit. But always there has been the consciousness of a gradually widening horizon, a gradually growing understanding, not only of the facts presented in our work, but of the intimate relation of the profession we have chosen to all other fields of human knowledge and endeavor. So that we shall enter the third year not, in all probability, with a superabundant knowledge of medical science,

"but strong in will
To strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield."

Each in His Own Tongue.

A fire-mist and a planet,—
  A crystal and a cell,—
A jelly-fish and a saurian,
  And caves where the cave-men dwell;
Then a sense of law and beauty,
  And a face turned from the clod,—
Some call it Evolution,
  And others call it God.

A haze on the far horizon,
  The infinite, tender sky,
The ripe, rich tint of the cornfields,
  And the wild geese sailing high,—
And all over upland and lowland
  The charm of the goldenrod—
Some of us call it Autumn,
  And others call it God.

Like tides on a crescent sea-beach,
  When the moon is new and thin,
Into our hearts high yearnings
  Come welling and surging in,—
Come from the mystic ocean,
  Whose rim no foot has trod,—
Some of us call it Longing,
  And others call it God.

A picket frozen on duty,—
  A mother starved for her brood,—
Socrates drinking the hemlock,
  And Jesus on the rood;
And millions who, humble and nameless,
  The straight, hard pathway plod,—
Some call it Consecration,
  And others call it God.

Class History.

ON a beautiful morning in September we entered the George Washington University. It was an event which will long be remembered, an event which will be the marking of an epoch in our lives, an event which marked the beginning of a period of four years of much study and many pleasant associations, an event which in the future will reflect many happy recollections. We were all strangers, and, owing to the fact that we were very shy, and kept ourselves in the shady corners, when not in the class room, with our hats well pulled down over our eyes, it was sometime before we became acquainted. There was a constant feeling of uneasiness that the Sophomores would administer unto us the usual dose of initiation syrup; in what form this syrup was to be given or what reaction it would produce was a mystery, but that it must be taken seemed inevitable until it appeared in The Hatchet that we were to be spared. What a relief! We were now able to breathe more freely and began to cheer up, become acquainted, and soon held a meeting to organize our little band and elect class officers.

This marks the real beginning of advancement of the Medical Class of 1911. Heretofore it had been too low in its infancy to appreciate the new surroundings and conditions to which it was subjected, and to adapt itself to them. But now, since the component parts had been formed into one body, since the different molecules had been brought into contact, a chemical reaction took place and a new substance was the result, a substance which is not soluble in water or acids, a substance which cannot be broken up by heat or cold, but which is destined to remain one, and which has the power of taking unto itself an unlimited amount of learning, and yield without restraint to the hands of the sculptors. Now the class continued on through its various stages of development, sometimes with slow and unsteady step, but always with a firm determination to reach the required station. The question of a "smoker" or class dance was agitated on several occasions, but our time was so fully occupied by work of greater importance that neither was held.

The Medics of 1911 constitute a wonderful class; they possess characteristics which mark them out distinctly from all others. Some are gifted with sweet angelic voices; some are talented in oratory and the translation of foreign languages; others have that rare power of logically associating their ideas so that the ends justify the means; still others are possessed of the ability of asking more questions in one hour than anybody could answer in a year. Much more, both good and bad, might be said about this little class, but time will not permit.

Accept these few words from my hands,
A heart-felt token given;
Long live and prosper ever
The Class of Nineteen Eleven.

Class History.

OME while ago I heard a story about a little girl (whose father was born in England, whose mother was born in San Francisco, and who herself was born in New York), wondering how they all happened to get together. And so it is with me when I look over the '12 Class Roll and see the great number of different States from which the fellows hail. What fortunes or what vicissitudes brought us together, who can tell? But here we are, and a grander, nobler class than ours cannot be found. But I must start at the beginning; that is, when '12 first became a class. This happened on Wednesday, the 25th of September, 1907, when Dean Phillips made an opening address in Lecture Hall No. 1. He said various things of interest, and one of the things he was particular in impressing on our minds was that we should forthwith have a class organization. Taking this to heart, we very soon afterwards, and according to custom, adopted a Constitution, and then we met in the little lecture hall just off from the Dissecting Room to elect class officers. Few of us knew for whom we were voting, and the result was that there were several ballots, and we were very prone to go over to the side which made the most noise. When the racket subsided, however, Charles W. Garlock found himself elected President, John C. Dyer Vice-President. William O. Bailey Secretary-Treasurer, Edwin A. Swingle Historian and Class Editor, and Edward R. Fontaine Sergeant-at-Arms.

Duly thereafter we all gathered at a smoker at Fritz Reuter's, and jokes, fun, music and a good dinner made things lively and very enjoyable. And then came Thanksgiving with the football game and the yelling and sore throats afterwards; and then Christmas, with its usual joys and home-going. But we had hardly returned and settled down to business again when on came the mid-year examinations, and we all began the habit of sitting up late, which has kept us from getting a good night's rest ever since. After these terrors had passed we found ourselves again in the maize of hard work. To the end of the year this monotony was practically unbroken, save for Easter. In the latter part of May, however, we were again confronted by a gruesome procession of examinations, and terror reigned supreme.

But that, through it all, however, our class has been successful, is beyond a doubt, for we have been very steady, and attentive to the work set before us. That it is a glorious class we are all sure, and are ready to defy anyone who would say aught but good of it. Little thought we at the beginning that we would be subject to the many strange experiences which have fallen to our lot in so short a time.

Of the twenty-seven fellows who started out in September, 1907, I wonder how many will be still with us in June, 1912? Who can say? We regret that four have already, through circumstances not of their own choosing, however, been forced to leave us. I speak of Mr. Alvin Bagby (who early in the year unfortunately contracted typhoid fever); Mr. R. E. Burhen, Mr. James E. Crown, and Mr. P. H. Zinkhan.

We have endeavored to maintain the high standard set for us by our predecessors and to conduct ourselves with becoming decorum; and in the future it will be, as it has been in the past, our aim to uphold the ideals and cherish the traditions of our college. We look back now with pride upon our record, knowing that it is a good one, and will let the "Mantle of Elijah" fall on the entering class, the men of 1913.

And so have we passed through our Freshman year, and are Freshmen now no longer.

Class Poem.

If you meet any boys who say "Pshaw!
The wit of this poem is too raw,"
You'll know they are blinded,
Because they were "granded,"
So, don't pay no heed to their jaw.

Studious *B*ailey, tall and slender,
Cares not a fig for the other gender.

We have a *B*rewer and he is wondrous wise,
If some freshie don't land him, 'twill be our surprise.
B stands for *B*urnett,
Who has an exact hand with the pipet.

*C*astleman, Phil, an ex-school teacher, and bright,
Can dissect in the dark as well as the light.

*C*hristiansen, the beloved, met his affinity in Chemistry class,
Often jumps lectures to be by the side of this lass.

We have a Freshman named *C*rane
Whose Ichabod wit has often caused pain.

*D*avis, who's great on the Virginia reel,
Believes now and ever in the square deal.

*D*yer's brilliancy ever increases,
(Luminous Dyer, his growth ne'er ceases,)
Questioned suddenly, he goes all to pieces.

Our quiet friend *E*llison, once president of a college,
But yet from George Washington he seeks more knowledge.

*F*isher is fat, fertile, and fine,
He attracts all of the women but none of the wine.

*F*ontaine, Edward, noted for his absence from the lecture,
What's the cause we cannot conjecture.

*G*arlock, our president, very high strung, indeed,
Thinks his decisions so accurate, no comment they need.

Lover of most good things is Shorty *H*ales,
Fondest of all is he of sweet females.

We have a Freshman, a Ph.D. is scouting,
And we wish him luck, our old pal *H*oughton.

To do four days' dissection in two is quite a stunt,
If you think it impossible, see our old friend Ike *H*unt.

*J*aner-Marquez, a gift of gay Castile,
Is developing a mustache that some day he may feel.

Little Boy Blue, come blow your horn,
We're getting very tired of hearing *L*ashhorn.

His Royal Highness Anderson W. *P*arks,
I'm afraid can't understand Freshman larks.

"More work and less play," says sober *P*itt,
"Fool with lights, bones, and things, no, not a bit!"

Grandpop *R*amsey from the Keystone State,
He's a wise old owl and strictly up-to-date.

'Tis sometimes said that *R*alph can't grin,
But a handsomer man there has never been.

*S*wingle, Eddie, our class editor and graduate in law,
An expert he must be from the size of his jaw.

CLASS POET.

The Youngest Veteran.

IT had been a late spring. May Day had been as cold as Christmas, and now on the sixteenth of May there were but few pedestrians on the streets without overcoats. Mrs. Swayne had made several trips out on the porch to look up the street. The last time a gust of wind drove her back into the house and shut the door after her with a bang.

"It's nearly nine o'clock. Your grandfather's later than he expected to be this evening, Mary," she said to a young girl of about fifteen, the other occupant of the room. "I suppose the boys are having a big time at their election. They say they are going to have speeches Decoration Day and the veterans are going to march way out to the cemetery from Jenkin's Hall, and that they're going to decorate the graves there and then they're coming back and have a banquet at the hall."

"Grandma," said Mary, "do you suppose they will elect grandpa to lead them?"

"How do I know, child? That's at least fifty times you've asked me that. You know they say it lies between him and Mr. Robbins. Mr. Robbins is awful popular in town, though. Listen."

Steps were heard coming up the walk. A moment later Captain Swayne was saying at the door, "Come right in, Bill, and warm yourself. Mother, the boys elected Corporal Robbins to lead the exercises on the thirtieth."

"Close pull between the Captain and me, though," remarked that individual. He was a stout, comfortable-looking man, the sanguine tint of whose complexion contrasted sharply with silvery white hair. Mr. Robbins was one of the class of people known as "easy going." He was universally known and liked throughout the town. His pension, the reason for which no one had ever discovered, and a small private income sufficed to keep him and his only surviving relative, a sister, in comparatively easy circumstances. Beyond that he cared not.

"It's a cold day for May, Bill," said the Captain, when they were seated around the fire. "I don't know as I've ever seen it colder. I only hope it turns warm before the thirtieth. We want a big crowd out, you know. And some of the boys ain't as young as they used to be. No, sir, they ain't all young men like me."

"Let's see," said Mr. Robbins, "you're the youngest of the lot, aren't you?"

"Yes, sir," chuckled the Captain, "the youngest veteran. I was just fifteen when I enlisted. Told 'em I was eighteen, though. That was forty-seven years ago. Why, man, do you know I wouldn't be a bit surprised if I was the last man in the Grand Army left alive?"

It was not the first time his companion had heard this. He affected to take it as a good joke, and they both laughed until the Captain began coughing.

"That's a bad cough for a young man like you," said Mr. Robbins.

"Oh, I've had that for years and years. It's been a little worse since I was caught in the rain one time last month. It will get almost well in the summer. Have a game of chess, you old fossil?"

"Ah, chess," said the fossil complacently. "Now, that's a game I can beat many a younger man at," and he winked at Mrs. Swayne.

"Mary, bring me the men, quick," said the Captain; "I'm going to show this decrepit old boaster something about chess."

It was the Captain's joke, in which he was more than half serious, to imagine that his former comrade, being two years older than he, was a mere feeble old totterer who was cheating the grave out of its just due. But as they sat that evening in solemn contemplation of the elaborately carved men whose slightest movements were subjects of profound study, Mrs. Swayne could not help noticing how much more erect and hearty their neighbor appeared than his vis-a-vis, whose slight form was now and then shaken with a cough he had had for many years, but which had been aggravated by a recent exposure.

Mrs. Swayne and her granddaughter retired about ten, leaving Mr. Robbins' king and a few pawns making a brave but ineffectual stand before two knights and a bishop. As was her custom, Mrs. Swayne came into Mary's room after her granddaughter was in bed and sat on the edge of the bed for a few minutes' chat. The two made complete confidants of each other. People remarked that Mrs. Swayne seemed young for her age and that Mary seemed old for hers.

"Mary," said Mrs. Swayne, "after all, I'm kind of glad your grandfather didn't get it."

"Why, grandma!" exclaimed Mary.

"I was just thinking," said Mrs. Swayne slowly, "he is not as well as he used to be. He would have had to do so much work about it. You remember how careful the doctor told us to be that time he was caught in the rain. Well, good-night, Mary, don't worry your little head about it." Mrs. Swayne kissed her and opened the door to go, but closed it again. "Mary," said she, "I do hope your grandfather won't do all the work for Mr. Robbins. I heard Mr. Robbins asking him as I came up if he would see somebody about something or other. Mr. Robbins is—well, you know, sort of shiftless. He would let your grandfather work himself to death making the arrangements for the thirtieth. Not but what he means well, but he doesn't seem to realize. And your grandfather is so good-natured. Well, good-night again. I must speak to him about it in the morning."

She was further confirmed in this resolution by a prolonged fit of coughing which attacked the Captain as he came up to bed, flushed with a decisive victory over his opponent. But the Captain proved deaf to all remonstrances when approached in the morning.

"No, mother," he said firmly, "Bill asked me to see to a few little things for him because he hasn't much of a head for business. And I reckon it won't hurt me none. You know, I'm the youngest one. Edith," he leaned across the breakfast table and spoke confidentially, "I've figured it out that if I live to be ninety years old, if I live to be ninety, I'll be the last veteran left alive." He brought this out triumphantly and paused to note the impression it produced. He was reasonably sure of this impression, for it never failed him.

"And now," he said, breakfast being over, I must run over and have a talk with Bill. If I'm not home at twelve don't wait lunch, as I may have to go to see the mayor and several other people this morning."

The Captain did not get home until late in the afternoon, and then he was thoroughly worn out. However, Mr. Robbins called in the evening with fresh difficulties, and they sat up late discussing them.

Great preparations had been made by the little town of Creston to celebrate the thirtieth in a way suitable to the dignity of a town of 6,000 inhabitants, of whom nearly a hundred were Grand Army men. As the Creston Herald expressed it:

"No trouble or expense is being spared in making the coming celebration of our National Memorial Day one which shall be long remembered not only by our fellow townsmen, but by that gradually thinning body of men to whose services in time of war our country owes so much. It will indeed be an inspiring spectacle to behold this band of war-worn veterans, headed by Corporal Robbins, march through our principal thoroughfares on this day, each with the steady step and martial bearing that many a youngster might envy."

The greater part of this preparation was being done by the faithful Captain, who plodded around the town "seeing" men, interviewing the local dignitaries and making infinite plans concerning the coming event. "If I am the last veteran left alive," he mused one day, as he was returning from a somewhat unsatisfactory visit to the mayor, who was too shrewd a politician to commit himself about anything, "I wonder how they'll celebrate Decoration Day. I'll have to be the commander, the band and the rank and file, I guess. Hello, there, you!" he shouted, as Mr. Robbins crossed the street just ahead of him. "Isn't it kind of sharp weather for an old man like you to be out?"

"Hello, Captain; you're just the man I wanted to see. We're having trouble about this band." And as they walked on together he detailed the trouble to his companion, who, as usual, promised to attend to it.

Accordingly the next morning the Captain prepared to take a trip ten miles out in the country, where the leader of the band lived. "John," said Mrs. Swayne, anxiously, "I wouldn't go way out there today—it's too cold. And, besides, it feels like snow."

"I must go, Edith," said the Captain. "The thirtieth is only five days off now, and we must be sure of the band. And who ever heard of snow as late as the twenty-fifth of May?"

"Why don't Mr. Robbins go himself?"

"Why, he has a committee meeting this morning that he has to attend.

But he lent me his horse and buggy. I can get out there in an hour, easy."

In fact, the Captain did arrive at his destination in exactly one hour. He was able to smooth over the trouble with the bandmaster and was soon ready to start home again. As he was hitching up he was surprised to see a few flakes of snow beginning to fall. "It is snowing, sure enough," he murmured; "I must hurry and get home." By the time he was actually on his way the snow was falling fast. "This is strange weather for May," he soliloquized, as he urged on his horse. "I only hope this snow is all gone before the thirtieth. It's cold, too." He slapped his arms vigorously around his chest. They were now within a mile of the town and the Captain was looking forward to arriving home in time for the mid-day meal. Suddenly the horse, which was plunging on doggedly through the uncertain footing, trod on a sheet of concealed ice, slipped, and went down. He made several attempts to rise, but was tangled up with the harness.

"Plague take it," said the Captain; "I suppose I'll have to get out in the snow and untangle this muddle." A few minutes' work sufficed to set the animal on its feet again, but the Captain's own feet became soaked in the process and he grew somewhat alarmed.

"Hurry up, General Grant," he cried, "or I'll get an awful cold from this."

General Grant, thus adjured, struggled forward bravely. The snow was turning into a cold, driving rain from which the Captain had difficulty in protecting himself. They had entered the town and were now nearing his home.

"Here, Willie," he called, catching sight of a neighbor's boy, "jump in here. Now, I'm going to get out at my house, and you take the horse around to Mr. Robbins' house, will you?"

On arriving home the Captain was taken with a severe chill, and the doctor was sent for in haste. "Pneumonia," he pronounced it. To Mrs. Swayne he said, "There is but little we can do for him. It must take its course." The days dragged on. The Captain complained little except of a pain in his side. Every minute Mrs. Swayne could spare from the household duties she spent at his bedside, telling him of the veterans who called daily.

The most constant of these visitors was Mr. Robbins, who was conscience-stricken at the thought of his responsibility. What time he did not spend in making inquiries about the Captain, he passed in buttonholing his comrades one after another and holding long conferences with them.

Friday morning a sudden change took place in the weather. The belated spring came with a rush, and as if to make amends for former delinquencies the sun shone with a tropical ardor that sent the mercury bounding skyward. The last lingering remains of the snow vanished magically, overcoats were laid by thrifty housewives away in deep boxes and dark closets, and barefooted boys appeared suddenly in whole troops.

When he made his regular visit to the Captain's house, the doctor found him gazing out of the window longingly.

"Doctor," he said eagerly, "do you think I'll be well enough to go to the exercises tomorrow? Well," as the doctor shook his head, "this will be the first time I've missed since the war. But the boys know how it is. Tell them, Doctor, tell them that my mind's with them if my body's not. Tell them that I'll be thinking of them all day long tomorrow. You won't forget, Doctor. And, Doctor, if—— if—— you know what I mean—I would like to have the boys know that I thought of them and that I hoped to be able to see them all again, but that fate was against me."

"All nonsense, Captain; you will outlive me yet by many a year. And, Captain, do you know there's not a veteran in this town but has been asking about you every day? And, now, good-bye, Captain; I hope to see you up and about in a few days." On his way out he cautioned Mrs. Swayne to be sure and send for him immediately if there was any change in his patient's condition.

Decoration Day dawned with a continuance of the mild weather. The veterans assembled according to their program and marched into the hall, led by Corporal Robbins. As they took their seats on the platform a breathless hush fell over the assembled townspeople, who occupied the main body of the hall. There was something pathetic about this little band of war-worn veterans. Flower of the nation's chivalry once, but little remained to tell of what once had been a youthful volunteer or the rugged hero of a dozen battles. The cheeks once tanned by many a campaign were furrowed by the relentless march of time, the eyes that forty years ago flashed with the fierce light of battle were dim now. Only a certain erectness in their bearing remained of their former discipline, and they were far from being imposing now. But as Corporal Robbins arose to make his address a murmur of applause started at one side of the room, swept across it and became deafening. Again and again he tried to speak, but each time the applause broke out afresh, and only when he caused the veterans to arise and salute in acknowledgment would it stop.

The speaker of the day was a young Congressman. He made the usual sort of speech, gave the time-honored similes their customary airing and sat down amid generous applause.

Then Corporal Robbins arose.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he began, "there is one of our number who is not here today." Then he began and told of all Captain Swayne had done, not sparing himself in the recital. As he proceeded he grew more confident. Although not usually a good speaker, he forgot himself, and thought only of the Captain. In conclusion he pictured him lying at home tormented by illness and longing to be with the boys. "And now," he said, turning to the veterans, "form in line. We're going to march down there and let the Captain know we haven't forgotten him."

Captain Swayne had passed a troubled night. His fever was high and a short, dry, painful cough kept him awake. The morning dawned with no abatement of his symptoms. His wife sat by the bed and strove to keep his mind away from the subject to which it persisted in returning. At about eleven o'clock she was called away for a few minutes. When she returned the Captain was sitting up in bed. "Edith," he exclaimed, "I feel better, almost well. I believe I'll get up."

"Don't you dare," she said. "Wait and see what the doctor says."

Mary was sent for the doctor, and met him on his way over. He entered the Captain's room, felt his pulse and took his temperature. Mrs. Swayne watched his face anxiously.

"Captain," he said, "how's the pain?"

"Gone," said the Captain. "All gone. Am I really well, Doctor?"

The doctor smiled. "Well, you're not exactly in condition yet for a six-day walking match. Still, I think I can pronounce you out of danger. In fact," he paused for a moment, listening. Then he turned to the window. "Captain," he said in a strange voice, "look out of the window." Drawn up in military array in the street were the Grand Army men. In front a huge flag floated, a band in gay uniform stood at ease on the right of the soldiers. Around all three men, women and children for as far as could be seen from the window were gathered, all gazing towards the Captain's house.

In the midst of a profound silence Corporal Robbins, bearing an enormous bouquet and attended by two other veterans, approached the house. The doctor met them at the door. "The crisis is over," he announced, "and the Captain is on the road to recovery. You can go up."

They were up the stairs in an instant.

"John," said his old comrade, grasping his hand. Then he arose and saluted. "Captain Swayne, in behalf of the veterans of Creston, we come to announce that you have been unanimously elected to lead the exercises every Memorial Day hereafter. And, Captain Swayne, we want you to accept this small token of our esteem." He laid the bouquet on the table.

"God bless you, Billy," said the Captain, "and you, too, boys, and all the boys—I don't know what I'm crying for; this is the happiest day of my life. Corporal Robbins, tell the veterans of Creston that I accept this honor they have done me and thank them heartily. And Bill, if you will come over for a while tonight, I will show you what the game of chess really means."

Outside, the committee made the announcement of the Captain's recovery. It was greeted with a roar of cheers. "And now everybody," shouted Corporal Robbins as Captain Swayne appeared at his window and waved to the crowd, "three times three for Captain Swayne, our future commander." As the echoes died away the band struck up, "Hail to the Chief," and the veterans took up their march.

As far as the Captain could see them they turned and waved to him, in absolute defiance of military discipline. Long after they had passed away down the street and the last strains of the band had died away the Captain sat propped up on the pillows smiling. He was gazing at a large bouquet on the card to which was written: "To the Youngest Veteran from his Comrades."

Class History.

TO chronicle all the events which have transpired during our three years in school, and to relate the achievements of the various members of the Class of 1908, would consume more time and space than is at our disposal.

Scarcely had we entered upon our studies when we found that the payment of our tuition was a small item compared to the amount we would have to expend at the various dental depots for the wherewithal to educate our fingers, and a few of the timid ones promptly developed financial "brainstorm" and sank into oblivion.

The first real tug of war came in January, 1906, when we were confronted with our first exam.: Histology. I shall not dwell upon the feelings which possessed us on that eventful evening; but it is enough to say that our course in that subject was so thorough that we are still wondering what relation exists between the structure of the "odontoblasts" and the "areas of Cohnheim."

We soon became convinced that the study of dentistry was no "cinch." The magnetic and interesting personality of our teacher of Anatomy, Dr. Shute, helped to account for our full attendance at the 8 o'clock morning lectures, especially when one considers that our time was taken up nightly in the dental laboratory until 11 and 12 o'clock, endeavoring to prevent accidents to vulcanizers and to neutralize the odor of H_2S.

On the whole, our Freshman year was an eventful and strenuous one: eventful in that we made the acquaintance of our teacher of "Operative Technics," Dr. Benson, whose patience was also taxed with us during the Junior year, and strenuous in that we turned out more vulcanite work than any of our predecessors.

It is only just to mention that during the Freshman year our class furnished the football team with a guard—Boarman. He also brought the class into prominence during our Junior year by serving the team in the capacity of center.

The commencement of our Junior year showed an absence of two of our members, Pearsall and Polani; but while we lost two of our original members we gained five new ones, Fairfield, Clark, Hopkins, Smitten and Bumpus. And, again, in Bumpus we did not gain, for he appears to be lost to us.

Need I mention our struggle with German silver plates, or the artistic results produced under the careful and able instruction of Dr. Allen S. Wolfe?

Many of the boys entered the infirmary during the Junior year and under the patient and tireless energy of Dr. Charles Bassett became acquainted with the first steps in practical operative work.

Our Junior year is memorable in that we first made the acquaintance of that sterling and learned teacher of operative dentistry, Professor Henry C. Thompson, and listened for the first time to the interesting and instructive lectures of our popular Dean, Dr. J. Hall Lewis.

By a kind act of Providence our class as a whole was saved from annihilation one cold and bitter night in February, while deeply engrossed in an effort to tell Professor Munroe on paper what we knew about Organic Chemistry. Everything was still and quiet, when crash! a sound like thunder reverberated throughout Hall No. 1. It was soon apparent that a section of the ceiling plaster had taken a disposition to become acquainted with the objects below, and the largest portion of it decorated the only hairless "coco" in the class.

While the close of our Junior year was marked with eager anticipation for the commencement of our Senior year, it was with no small amount of regret that we realized we would as a class part company with Dr. Benson, whose patient efforts in leading us over rough places in our Freshman and Junior years were sincerely appreciated.

With the advent of our third year we were pleasantly surprised to find we had a complete class roll. Every man being on the jump, we were easily picked out as the "mighty Seniors."

We soon made the acquaintance of Dr. J. Roland Walton, whose lectures and quizzes on crown and bridge work and Orthodontia soon put us on an easier road in these subjects.

We took the infirmary by storm as soon as it opened, and kept Dr. Bassett sidestepping and parrying for breath. Our gold fillings are works of art and dazzling to the sight.

We point with pride to our attendance at lectures, and especially at quizzes, on the various dental subjects; and, looking back on what we have accomplished, who shall deny our right to be proud?

The day of our dispersion as a class is approaching whether we reach the coveted goal or not, and some of us may part forever; but may we all prove an honor to our Alma Mater, and in years hence sometimes allow our thoughts to wander back to our college days and recall some of the many incidents and pleasant hours of comradeship spent together in the halls and laboratories of "George Washington University."

In conclusion I can do no better than quote the words of the historian of last year's graduating class:

"Armed with the knowledge gained through the patient teaching of such men as Thompson, Lewis, Walton and Bassett, we aim to take the world by storm and thereby become a cog in the wheel of the steady and rapid advance which the dental profession is making in the world of arts and sciences."

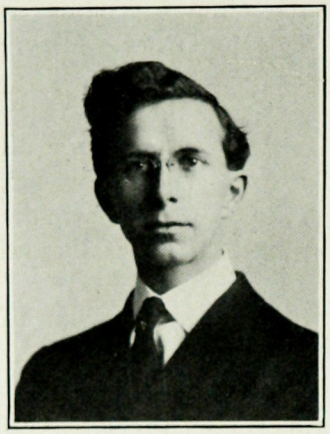
William Richard Addison.

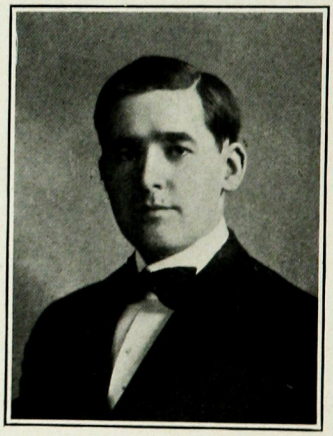
Ψ Ω.

"Bill" hails from the "Badger State," and has some private ideas about the study of dentistry. A little bare spot is commencing to show on Bill's head—cause: Hard scratching during quizzes. Is one of best natured boys in the class and expects to return to Wisconsin.



Guy Wilson. Angelo.

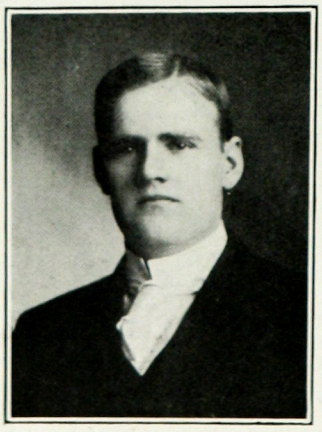
"Mike" is a native of the "Old Dominion State," where he went during the Thanksgiving recess to hunt rabbits. It pains him to talk on the subject. A regular inhabitant of the infirmary.



James Walter Bernhard.

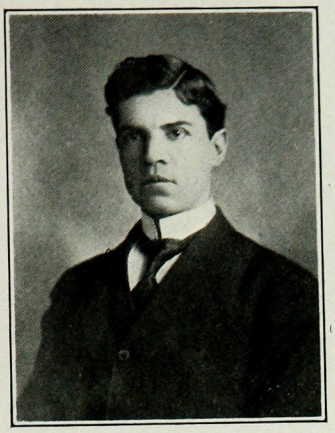
Ψ Ω.

Bernhard was born at Washington Square, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania. Is a graduate of Whitpain High School, Montgomery Co., Pa., and also of the Pierce School in Philadelphia. Is a good student and always willing to help his fellow. Served the class as Editor during his Freshman year and as President during the Junior year.



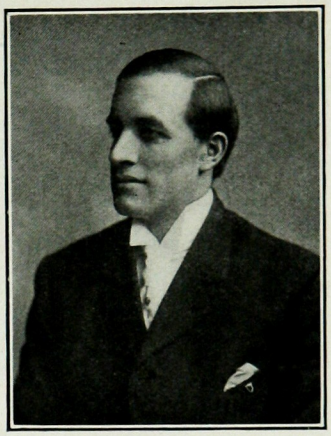
Alan Smith Boarman.

This cut does not show his size, but you can obtain some idea of it when you learn that he was guard and centre on the Varsity Eleven during his Freshman and Junior years respectively. Is a native of Maryland and expects to return to that State.



EMLYN J. BRITTON.

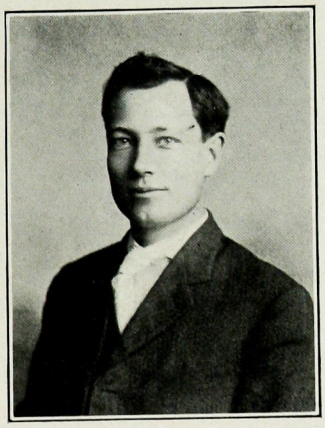
This industrious young man is also a native of the "Keystone State." At quizzes he is always "there with the goods." Can generally be found in the infirmary. Britton has seen much of the world, having circumnavigated the globe.



ROBERT HENRY CLARK.

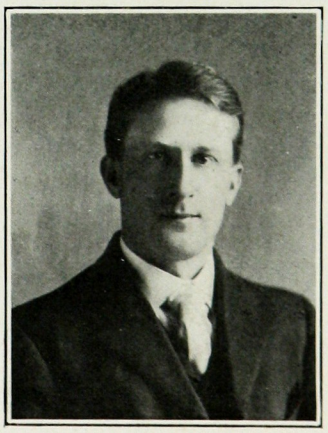
Ψ Ω, Φ X.

"Clarkie" joined us at the start of our Junior year, coming from the "Kentucky School of Medicine," where he took two years in medicine. He entered in infirmary during the Junior year and is a regular attendant at classes. Clarkie hails from "Hoosierland," but says that Brooklyn, N. Y., has more attractions for him than Indiana.



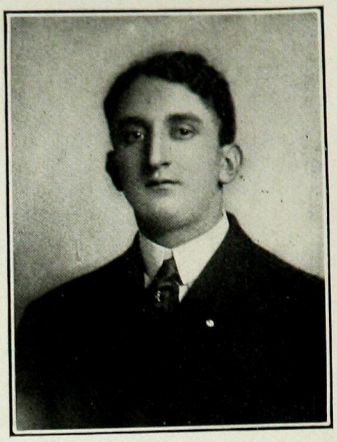
ALFRED WILLIAM CUMMINGS.

"Al" is our hustling Class President. He came here from Kansas, where he used to teach school. Doesn't look as if he was hard on the little ones. Got a good start by entering the infirmary during the Junior year.



THOMAS LEON FAIRFIELD.

Here we see our Vice-President. Fairfield was another of the new arrivals at the start of the Junior year. He is very sensitive about his abilities as a Prosthetic man, but is considered an expert by people who know and can judge.

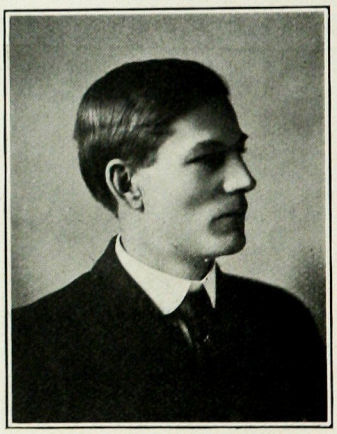


ARTHUR WELLESLEY GASH.

A native of Newport, Rhode Island. Being Class Editor and consequently writer of this is too sensitive to say more!

JOHN ALEXANDER GRUBBS.

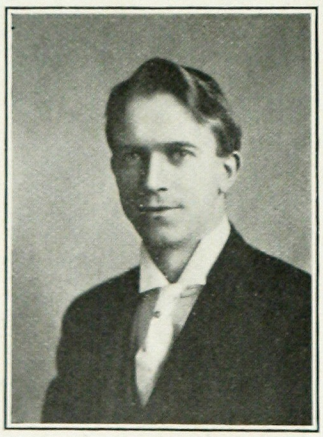
"Grubbsie" comes from Virginia and has a well-fed look. Is an honest worker and regular attendant, and served the class as President during his Freshman year.



CASPER FLORIAN HELMIG.

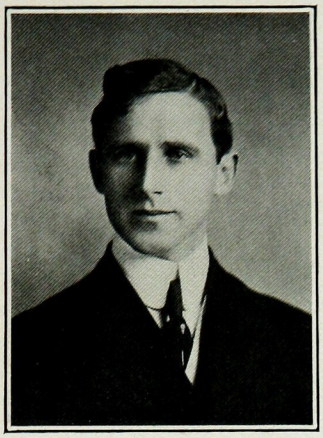
Ψ Ω.

This energetic young gentleman hails from Independence, Missouri. Note his independent look. Was one of the leading basketball players in Kansas City before coming to Washington. "Helmitem" can always be found in the lecture room or laboratory when anything is going on. Handled the class money during his Junior year, being Secretary and Treasurer.



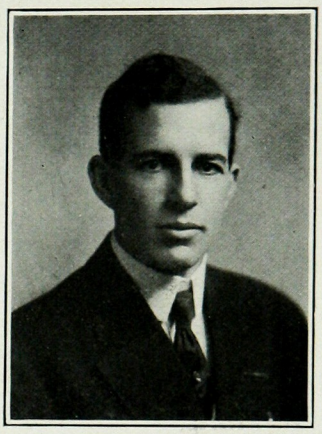
CHARLES MILLINGTON HIGGINS.

"Higgie" is our Class Secretary and Treasurer, and has his hands full taking care of the class funds. Is a regular attendant at classes and a hard, honest worker; always willing to oblige anybody. Will practice in West Virginia, his home.



William Clarence Houghtelin.

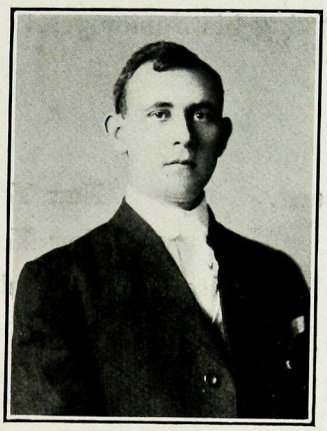
"Hout" came from Kansas, where the sunflowers grow. The boys honored him during his Freshman year by making him Class Secretary and Treasurer. Is a regular attendant at classes and distinguished himself by seeing the class pins through to a successful ending.



Harry Dow Johnson.

Σ X.

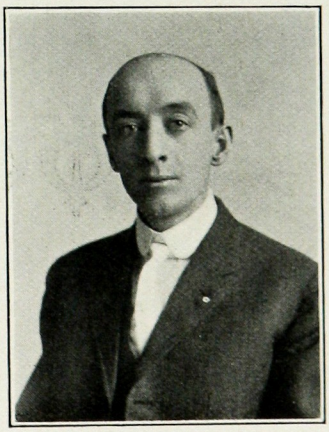
And still another from Missouri. This handsome young man is the "Beau" Brummel of the class; and the way he flirts around the gentle sex in the infirmary singles him out as a future leading light in dentistry. I might add that Johnnie is very popular, especially with the ladies. Also an authority on leech bites and syncope and mixing cement with glycerine.



Herbert Spencer Murdoch.

Ψ Ω.

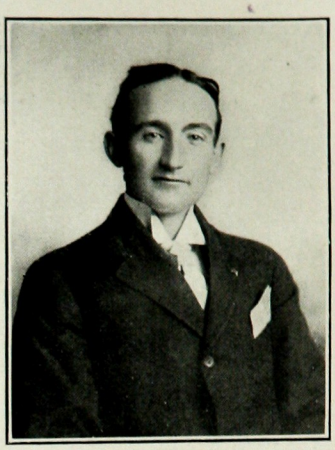
Was born in 1881 at Cape Girardeau, Missouri. Murdoch took an academic course for three years, and then taught rural school. "The scholars all loved him dearly." Is quite a lion on the ballroom floor, and endorses the sentiment, "I'd rather two-step than waltz."



George Francis Peck.

Ψ Ω.

"Diplomatic George" is another native of New Jersey and is noted for his tact and popularity among the gentle sex. About the only man in the class who can always "flash" a roll. The rest of us have to roll over. Expects to embark upon the somewhat doubtful sea of matrimony after he starts to practice. Class Vice-President during Freshman year.



GEORGE SMITTEN.

Hails from the "Keystone State." Smitten came into our midst at the beginning of the Junior year, coming from the "Western University of Pennsylvania."

HENRY CISSELL YOUNG.

Ψ Ω.

"Cy Young" not renowned for throwing baseballs, but is for throwing orthodontia cases together. Georgetown has some great attraction for Young. Didn't sit with the rest of the boys at the "New National" on College Night, but said he wanted two together down in the pit. Young was Vice-President during his Junior year. Is a native of Maryland.

To Fame.

O Thou, who ever guard'st with jealous care,
The lonely summit of Parnassus' Hill,
Give me but leave to drink from out the rill,
That laves the lowlands lying shadowed there;
Thy toilsome heights, traversed by pathway bare,
Let others climb, where crag and rocky sill
Begrudge with restless spite and sullen will,
All onward steps, all laurels that they wear.
I only ask, O Fame, that sweet content
I find in tasks renewed with ev'ry morn—
I ask an age with human service bent,
Respected years, with labor duly worn,
And grant that when there comes to life well spent
A quiet end, there be one friend to mourn.

Class History.

THE "Freshmen Dental, 1910," dates its existence from the seventh day of October, 1907. Previous to that time the various component "Freshies" had been "existing in a free state"—a state comparable to one, among many, propounded to us by our Professor in Chemistry.

The omnipresent and much dread Sophomores furnished food for thought—we selected the "Anatomical Laboratory" as an oppropriate meeting place. Grewsome and awe inspiring were our surroundings. A skeleton, artistically dabbed with bright colors, suspended from above, swayed measuredly to and fro. In a lone electric lamp overhead, the automatic carbon adjusting mechanism was evidently working overtime—intermittent periods of total darkness added much to our general peace of mind.

Notwithstanding, we proceeded to get down to business. No time was lost in the election of officers and as a result the following-named gentlemen are now holding forth:

Pearce, "the heavy college boy," fills the presidential chair only weighs about two hundred and fifty pounds; office of figure-head (vice-presidency) and Class Historion, held by one long, drawnout proposition—"that's me." Our Secretary, young, aspiring, "the busy boy," Hurwitz, always "on the job." The Treasurer (signs his name S. Everton Armstrong) was elected because he looks so honest. The Class Editor, Eslin, a shining literary light, is better known as "Rummy Ez" (there is no direct evidence that he imbibes.) The Sergeant-at-Arms, Pelton by name, is a most dignified individual (a good sport just the same.)

Being full of enthusiasm further business developed. A class design and sweater were proposed and accepted. Also being Freshmen, we decided upon a smoker; a committee was appointed to arrange matters. Thus ended the first meeting. We departed silently and unmolested.

Our first smoker proved a complete success. An excellent spread, to which ample justice was done by all, music and the general air of cheerfulness which prevailed, brought to light after dinner speakers, soloist and the now famous "Dental Quartet." Toasts and college yells were given, songs sung, and stories told. We finally parted in a happy state of mind, fully convinced that we were "The Class."

November the 25th saw "The Class," in a body, attending the benefit performance, given by the Columbian Women, at the New National. 'Twas there we gained our reputation as a class with a true college spirit.

At the Thanksgiving game, although not conspicuous, "Dental 1910" did its share. Each member succeeding in yelling himself hoarse, lending his voice to cheer on the braves.

A second smoker enjoyed equally as well as the first brought us together, outside "the walls of learning," before the holidays. The Christmas spirit was with us. The old song, "It's Christmas in the Old Home," still rings in our ears and pleasant are the recollections.

We mustered twenty-two aspiring students at the beginning of our career. Three have fallen away, the remaining nineteen are at it, each one determined to be in at the finish.

It is needless to comment upon the general qualifications of each individual. All appear in the picture, which speaks for itself.

Echoes of the Class Room.

Student—Doctor, I was reading a few days ago where a man out west had discovered a method for tempering gold.

Dean Lewis—Why! I have been reading about that nearly every week for thirty years.

Dr. Thompson—Mr. ———, tell me the shape of the arch in a lymphatic temperament.

Student—Well, it's not square, Doctor, because that's the shape in a bilious temperament.

Dr. Benson—Mr. ———, could you tell me another method for filling root canals besides those just mentioned?

Student—Couldn't you flow gold solder in them, Doctor?

Professor—Mr. ———, if a patient came into your office with a fractured jaw bone, what would be your first step?

Student—Why, I'd send him around to Dr. Hagan.

Class History.

EHOLD in these promising young candidates for the Master's Degree the remnant of the Class of 1907. One cannot properly appreciate the quality of the finished product if he does not see the raw material. When Dean Tucker first beheld this Class he wept. After he had read their papers on Constitutional Law he resigned his job and hired out to the Jamestown people to run their Exposition. Naturally he had a family-leaning toward "Tucker on the Constitution," and he has never been held accountable for the awful decimation which he caused in the Class before he left.

Dean Vance has been more kind and considerate. Having no personal or family doctrines to uphold and defend in relation to real property he has always insisted that the subject is quite a simple one and as plain as day, for there is really only one side to it, notwithstanding a notion of the ancients that the earth is hollow. To his everlasting praise it should be added that there is no fairer professor in the whole University; though, unfortunately, he occasionally finds himself hedged in by certain narrow and unyielding rules which forbid the free exercise of conscience. For example, the history paper has recorded that when an illustrious member of the Class one day complained to the Dean that his mark in real property did not do him justice, Professor Vance scrutinized the questions and answers very carefully and conceded the point without argument. "But you see," he explained sadly, "the Faculty will not permit me to give any lower mark."

Those who felt the necessity of pursuing other branches of the law, after having enlightened the Dean on remainders, and having corrected some of his fallacies as to future interests, for it may be said he never did claim to be much of a seer, entered into an engagement to make things clear to Professor Lorenzen in that delightful little study in metaphysics, for want of a better name termed, "Conflict of Law-renzens." The conflict would not have been so prolonged and disastrous if the Professor had yielded more gracefully; but he was handicapped somewhat like his German friend who was nearly pounded to death before he could remember the magic word "Enough." This deficiency in his English, rather than any malicious intent, is to be charged with the slaughter of 1907.

The conversion of the Trustful Thurston was next attempted and carried through with considerable success. After having studied Ames' Case-book for nearly four months, and having had the benefit of various dissenting opinions, he showed a remarkable aptitude on a certain day in May for picking out and identifying those cases which were submitted to him deeply disguised or in distorted and mangled form. Inasmuch as he does not think, as Professor Lorenzen does, in ten different languages, he found it difficult to harmonize differences and settle upon the weight of authority. As time was too short for oral argument, he did the best he could with the briefs, and the mistakes which he made were of the head and not of the heart.

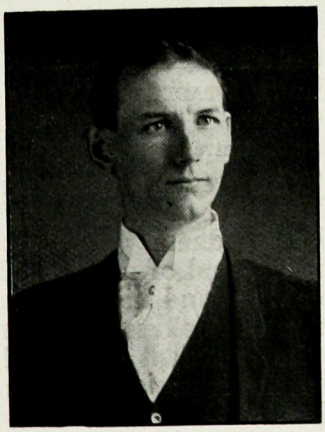
Last June some three-score of those Chancellors in embryo went forth from the University and fell ruthlessly upon the unsuspecting bar-examiners. After a two-days' struggle the examiners cried for mercy and immediately put up a stiffer set of rules to better defend themselves in future against similar carnage.

What now remains of this indomitable Class is laboring on, not with a view to adding lustre to its fair name but to round out the work so well begun by convincing Doctor Needham that, though he has greatly improved, neither he nor Judge Harlan invented the "Commerce Clause;" and by disabusing Doctor Scott's mind of that fanciful and heretical notion that Hugo Grotius is the "Miracle of Holland," when everybody else knows to a moral certainty that the "Miracle of Holland" is now chasing the Government with his "Big Stick."

You can always tell this Class; but you can't tell it much about law.



JOHN FREDERICK BARTH.

Kentucky.
LL.B., George Washington University, 1907.

This was born in Kentucky, but not in Breathitt County. Since his adimssion to the bar he has served on the King's Bench and has exhibited profound knowledge of the Roman law. In the early part of 1908 he engaged in a desperate struggle with Professor Willis' assignments in taxation, but he has survived the ordeal and will be ready for the June procession.

Born in Cincinnati, Ohio, August 11, 1883. Engaged in business in his native burg from the tender age of fourteen until the migratory fever seized him and carried him off—to plague the denizens of the Capital City. Intends to return, like a roaring lion and a devouring pestilence, to his old stamping ground and hang out his shingle after Taft, Foraker, Harmon or some other good Cincinnatian is chosen to guide the Nation's destiny. Ralgh is the prize dreamer of the class.

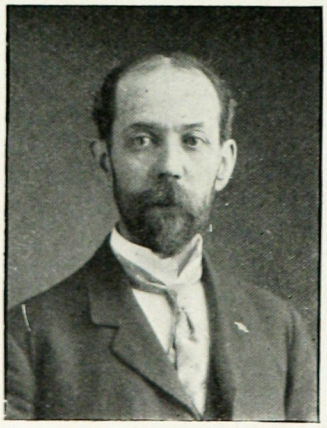
This Reuben was found down on the farm near Evansville, Indiana, but left at an early age to enter the service of Uncle Sam. Being of a migratory disposition, he has traveled extensively, hence his conflicting theories of law.



Corry Montague Stadden.

Ohio.

LL.B., George Washington University, 1907.

He has more degrees to his credit than any student in the University. The most of them, though, were not conferred by Dr. Needham. They were superimposed by the business end of a goat. He has been practising since July and his first case was an attempt to break up the ice trust. He sent the ice man to jail, but the President took fright and left for Europe and the trust is still doing business at the old stand.

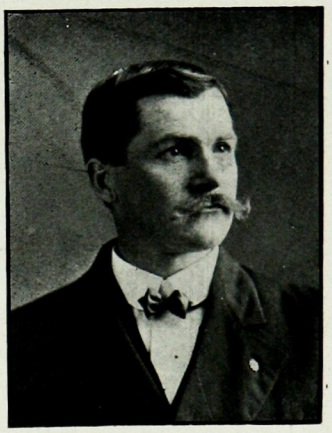
"Childe Harold" is strictly a local product, but that should not be held against him. He is a hard student at examination time, but really can't afford the time for the dull routine of the class room.

A brilliant career is predicted for the "Infant" by those who know him well, if he can but accomplish as much in the field of law as he has in the field of romance.



Omar J. Veley.

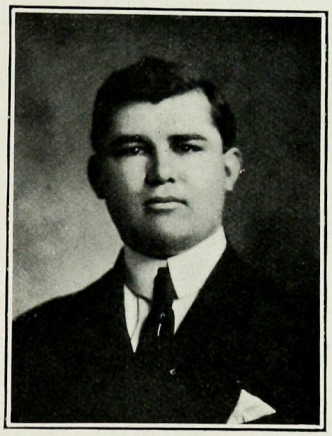
LL.B., George Washington University, 1907.

This cumberer of the soil is a school teacher by profession, and a military man by training, but a lawyer by habit. Though often tried, he is seldom found wanting and his knowledge of legal lore is only limited by the number of his books. At present he is donating his services to Uncle Sam, but he expects next year to go into business for himself among the unsuspecting natives of upper New York.



William H. Willis.

LL.B., University of Southern California, 1907.

Though born in Iowa, "Willie" abandoned his domicile of origin and acquired a domicile of choice in California at the tender age of one year. Other records of this early life have been quashed, but those desiring information may obtain same by writing to the Clerk of Court, Amelia, Iowa; is a great believer in the writ of mandamus, as it was the means of his being admitted to practice in the United States District and Circuit Courts.

Class History.

UNHERALDED we came, burning with a thirst for knowledge of the law—whatever that was—and for other things. There was no blare of trumpets as we entered and took our places in those halls where for three years we were to sit and think Great Thoughts while we appeared to sleep. Our fame did not precede our coming in as it will our going out. From the whole wide world we came, and to the wide world we will return, for is it not now our lawful prey? (Ans.—Yes, it is; it is our meat.)

As a first-year class the only thing we lacked was nothing. We had the whole works, from a prohibition campaign to a course in sales, not to mention innumerable magic lantern shows which made us giddy with visions of the pitfalls which do beset the unwary endorser, and maps of the calamitous consequences of A's return from Rome, provided no gin is sold on the premises. We had come together but once or twice, when upon assembling one afternoon for a class meeting, we lifted up our eyes and beheld Sheridan—he of the cane—prancing hither and yon on the stage with the grand air of one who is the Candy Kid and knows it. So completely were our yet feeble spirits dominated by his masterful, yea, even commanding, presence, and his resonant voice that we forthwith elected him temporary chairman, and gave him a privy council which was to construct a constitution and arrange for a smoker.

When the bids and specifications for the smoker were submitted by the committee, there straightway arose a great noise. Divers prohibitionists whom we had all unwittingly been harboring—in our very homes, as it were—reared up on their hind legs and pawed the air, and declared that the class should not have its fair reputation besmirched by an orgy made disgraceful by the spectacle of its honored members partaking of malt, spirituous, or petrifying beverages. A drought seemed imminent, but presently the simoon* abated, and at the smoker there prevailed an agreeable moisture. When we found ourselves at the banquet hall we had our hats checked and locked the door to prevent the escape of those of our ambitious classmates who desired to fall upon certain low sophomores who stood without our gates making faces at us through the glass doors, and to rend and grievously beat the aforesaid sophomores, to the end that they might be shown up and taught to respect their betters. Then we retired to the upper regions, where we made merry and waxed wild, being much edified by the speeches of our professors and doing full justice to the menu, which comprised music, stories, good cheer and beer. Afterwards the bunch went out all together and took a long snaky walk, which began at Rauscher's and ended to slow music.

Soon we had our first election, and it was on this occasion that the Jones known as Bobby acquired that distinction to which in these later days he is wont to allude with such touching tenderness. He was elected president, and though he is now but the Class Cop, and though the mantle of the noble office which once he graced has since fallen upon the shoulders of Pennsylvanians and Sandwich Islanders, he will never, never NEVER, says Bobby, forget that he was our first love. When Robert gets this off there is not a dry eye in the house.

In our second year we had election for three weeks. We cast ballots before and after classes, and then a few times at night. We voted as many times daily as there are issues of the New York Journal. On the forty-seventh ballot the palm of victory went to Davis, and amid salvos of applause he was carried to the rostrum, from whence he gladdened our hearts by his genial grin and wise words. His political rise may be traced to stogies; his fame rests upon the energy and ability with which he filled his office.

When, during our first year, the sophomores came in to take contracts with us we saw how frail they were. Of a truth they were nothing much. Surely they had not improved the opportunities that had been theirs, for could not we, the freshmen, already outsrip them in legal knowledge? On the whole, were we not, in fact, pretty keen, and learned, and all that? We thought so, and cherished the belief until the marks in partnership came out. Then we forgot all about it and began to wonder what lay behind the last two weeks and seven examinations of our second year. The mortality attending this period of our history was exceedingly high. Real property fell upon us like a scourge, sparing some, but blighting all. How anyone got through is a mystery more insoluble than the conflict of laws.

Concerning examinations, it seems that there should be no occasion for the frightful havoc they so often entail. Why not let each student when he passes in his paper be handed a pass in the nature of a rain check, which will give him a right of reentry if, when he gets out into the lobby and talks things over with the other fellows, he suddenly recollects that before passing in his paper he inadvertently failed to correct some trifling error or slight omission.

The crowning incident of our political history was the nominations for third-year offices. Democracy was vindicated; every man had a chance at a job. At the smoker those who were not nominated for the office of president made the rest of the class line up and show what they could do as spell-binders, meanwhile assisting their efforts from the side lines by interposing remarks of a gratuitous and helpful nature, calculated to stimulate the flow of oratory. Each one endeavored to show that electioneering was a thing utterly foreign to his inclinations and intentions, but that no one could have more deeply at heart the interest of the class, and that no one could give truer service in the high office than it would be his endeavor and delight to do. Perhaps it was because he made all this so plain that McClellan was elected.

In the words of the seer, it is not every man who makes a hit that brings in a home run. And so not all who started out with us nearly three years ago are with us now. But there is still left a goodly number. Hepburn has fulfilled the promise of his novitiate, and the questions he now propounds to the professors are no less intelligent than they were two years ago. Whitten has brought his whiskers through unscathed, and all innocent of the touch of the scythe. When he recites they still vibrate in a horizontal plane as of yore, and rustle with the breezes as was ever their wont. Mike has become utterly incorrigible, and so callous is he now that not even the sorrowful reproof of the sergeant-at-arms can feaze his impervious crust. Titus has not yet told us what he did with that twenty thousand he dug out of a gold mine. We trust, however, that he did not spend it foolishly.

One more struggle and we are free. In a short time we will leave the University and we will go out as well equipped with the knowledge and ethics of the law as the most careful instruction can make us. We have not only been taught how to use the tools of our profession, but also how to use them for the honor of our profession. And with whatever success we meet, and to whatever honors we attain, we will never reach the point where we will not be proud to give full credit for our good start to G. W. U.

Claude Worthington Owen.

Δ T Δ.

Maryland.

Was born in Gaithersburg, Md., and is still alive and kicking. Like the majority of the class, does not believe in ruining his health by overstudy, and at the same time does not have to worry over any back conditions. Spent a couple of years at St. John's College, Annapolis. Is an inveterate "fusser," yet, judging from circumstances, believes in specializing. Expects to practice somewhere after he graduates.

JAMES TROSST PATTERSON.

District of Columbia.

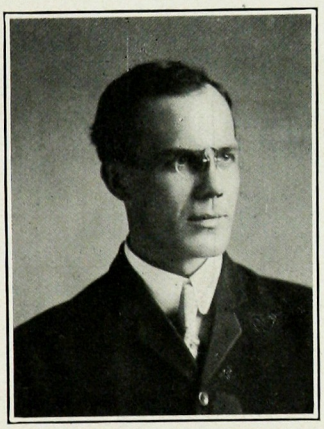
Hottest scrub on the football team. His voice is sad and pathetic. He should always appear for the plaintiff. Commended to the especial consideration of widows, orphans and one-legged veterans.

ADON DANIEL PHILLIPS.

New York.

B.S., G. W. U., 1906.

Born in Otselic, N. Y., in 1878. Graduated from High School, Norwich, N. Y., in 1899. Came to Washington and entered Columbian College in 1901; graduated in 1906. Member of the Needham Debating Society and of the Senior Council.



IVON WILLIAM PHILLIPS.

New York.

Born in Chenango County, N. Y., in 1882. Graduated from Norwich High School, Norwich, N. Y., in 1900. Member of the Needham Debating Society, G. W. U., and secretary of Society one term. On winning team third Inter-Society Debate, '05-'06. Member Senior Council.

LEON PRETZFELDER.

Virginia.

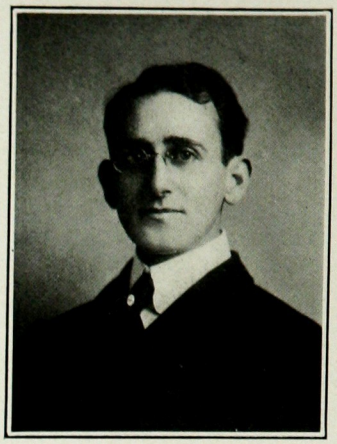
Columbian Debating Society Representative Inter-Society Debate, 1907; University Congress.

Born in Alexandria, Va., in December, 1886. It is hardly believable that one so beautiful, so fair, possessing "Hyperion's curl, the smile of Jove himself," could have been born there, but this simply proves that truth is stranger than fiction. The subjects of his practices, as the result of his LL.B., are located between Washington and Alexandria, and possibly Georgetown.

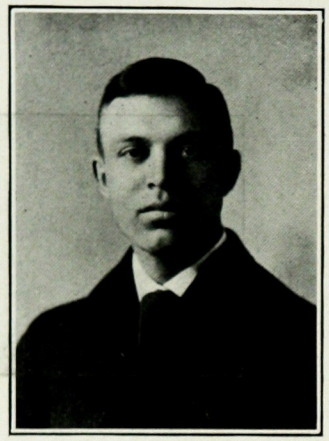
George W. Ramsey.

Φ Δ Φ.

Illinois.



George first met his parents in the State of Ohio in 1878. After graduating from Bradley Polytechnic Institute, he was irresistibly attracted to that world-renowned center of antiprohibitionism, Peoria. From thence this animated morsel of congeniality floated gently into our midst and assumed the burdens of the Patent Office.



Don Seavey Rathbun.

Δ T Δ.

Iowa.

A.B., Cornell College; A.M., Iowa University.

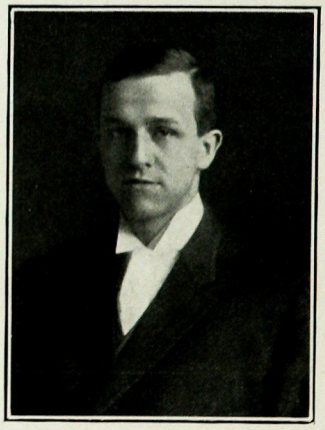
Born amidst the waving corn stalks of Illinois and educated in Iowa. Don Seavey combines to a remarkable degree the good old-fashioned common sense of the farm, with the learning of a scholar and the culture and courtesy of a true gentleman. He expects to practice in Iowa or South Dakota.

Paul Allen Rehr.

Φ Δ Φ.

Pennsylvania.

Executive Committee; Columbian Debating Society; Sergeant-at-Arms, '06-'07.



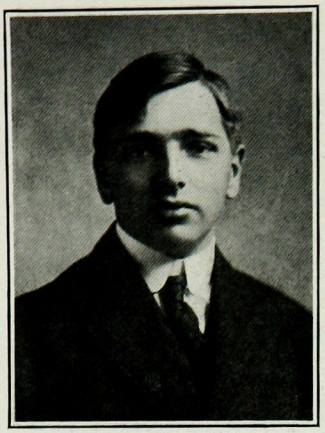
"Kraut's" feet are exceeded in length by those of only one person in the Law School. Born in the little Dutch village of "Budweiser-on-the-Eis," and later went to Pennsylvania, which explains much. Can eat pie and look wise—hence will make a success. Beneath his shingle will be found, "Second-hand law books sold on a contingent fee."

Harrison Heath Riddleberger.

Φ Σ K.

Virginia.

A life of nearly a moiety of a half century has brought him almost to the summit of his ambition, the practical use of his legal learning in the "co'tes" of Virginia. Daytimes, Harry Heath holds down a chair in the south wing of the Heap Big Wigwam; rests himself evenings studying law as expounded at G. W. U.



Reginald Rutherford.

Δ T Δ.

Maryland.

Treasurer of Needham Debating Society; Executive Committee; Basketball Team.

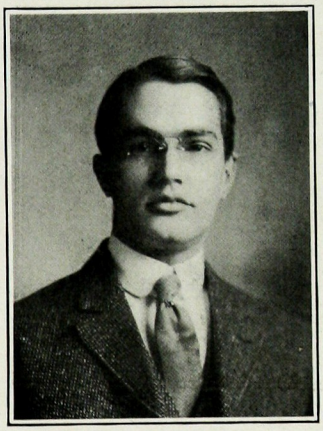
"Reg" floated into Washington, D. C., on the 24th day of September, 1885, and has been creating disturbances ever since. He has learned law in great volumes (Smith's two volumes on Corporations). Lately "Reg" has become quite patriotic and grins from ear to ear when any one speaks of the beautiful Capital or Capitol Hill. We are at a loss (?) to know why. (Who said "fluffy ruffles?")

James MacDermott Sheridan.

Colorado.

Treasurer, Columbian Debating Society.

Born of German parentage in Cork, 187—. Because he tired of a potato diet and for other reasons, he left Ireland at the age of three and after many wanderings became naturalized in Colorado. Left the Law School of Denver University in '98, and followed the Flag into the Philippines. Was brevetted lance corporal baronet by Gen. Wood. Will tour the world and then——.

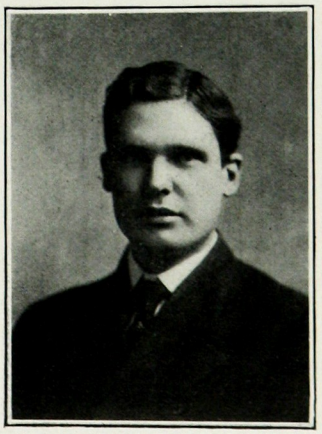


Dyer Smith.

Pennsylvania.

M.E., Lehigh, '03; Executive Committee.

The "Demure" Mr. Smith comes to class occasionally. Ever late and a good sleeper. His quiet reserve indicates that he is in love. At present engaged as an examiner in the Patent Office. Has not definitely settled on a place to practice. Offers from widows, orphans, gum drop or evaporating corporations will not be considered.—1 ad. 3t.



E. G. Smith.

Δ T Δ.

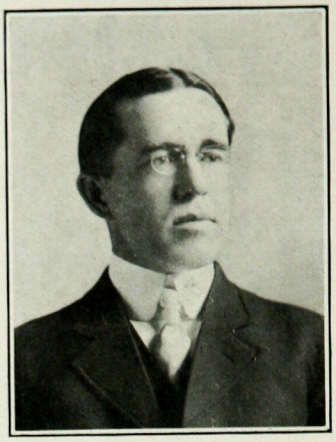
South Dakota.

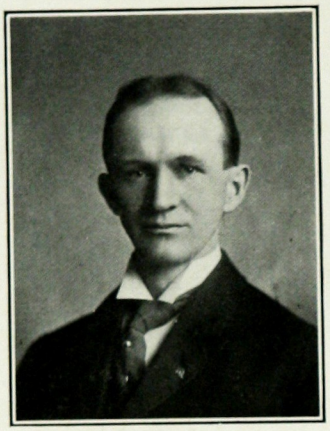
Traveling incog. Member of that fast dying clan, Smith. "They have gotten so in this country that an honest Injun can't throw his tomahawk in the air without having it fall down and killing someone of the name of Smith." (Bill Nye.)

G. T. Smith.

Maryland.

Also traveling incog. Also a member of the clan above referred to. He does not look like a "Smith," but appearances are so deceiving! If law and custom change so that the male member of a wedding ceremony takes the name of the better half, why, there is still hope.





Howard William Stull.

Pennsylvania.

University Congress; Columbian Debating Society; Senior Council.

"Judge" was born in Johnstown, Pa. Survived the flood by embarking in the profession of school teaching. Being a descendant of the illustrious Daniel Boone, the simple life of the pedagogue was rather too tame, so he has lived the strenuour life ever since.

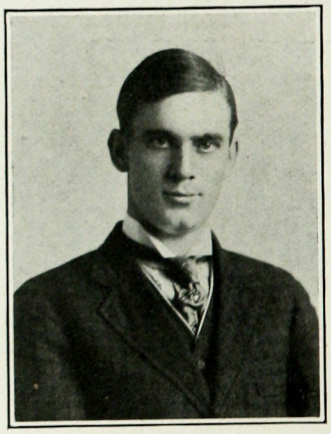
Charles Algernon Sunderlin.

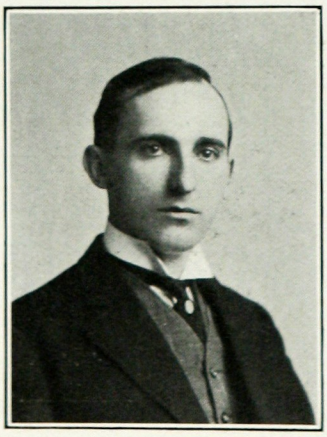
Φ Γ Δ, Δ Σ P, Φ A T.

Iowa.

A.B., University of Nebraska, 1907; University Congress; Needham Debating Society.

Born at Chase, Mich. City editor of the Clinton Daily Age for one year. At Nebraska University he represented his school in victorious debates with Iowa, 1905, and Wisconsin, 1906. Won the Chancellor's prize for excellence in debate, 1905. Was a member of the inter-fraternity council, chairman of Soph. hop, et cetera, several times.

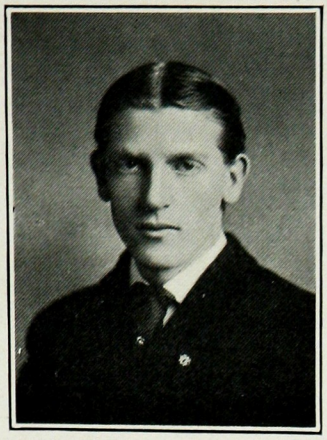




Louis Kossuth Sunderlin.

Nebraska.

Born in Reed City, Michigan. Since then has passed through a period of development that would make the Darwinian theory reach for the door; beginning as a poultry fancier, and passing successively, without a scratch, through the stages of salesman, hypnotist, prestidigitator, reporter and student. He says, though, that if good breezes keep up the end of the cruise is in sight and that if he once reaches the bar he'll anchor.



Simon Bernard Stein.

Massachusetts.

Secretary and Vice-Presdent of the Needham Debating Society, 1907; Senior Council, 1908; Member Massachusetts Bar.

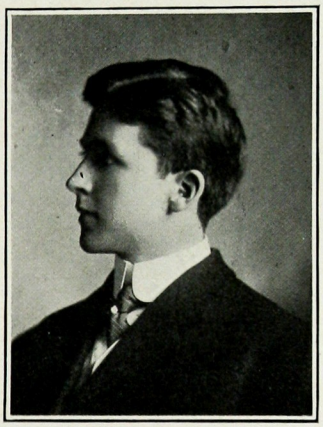
It doesn't take a man with three eyes to guess Stein's pedigree. Of course, he is from Boston, and that he has inherited legal proclivities is demonstrated by the fact that he jumped over the Bay State bar while yet a Junior. To further distinguish himself Stein has cut loose from the '08 bachelors and joined the benedicts.

Louis Ralph Taylor.

Illinois.

B.S.; Secretary, '05-'06; University Congress; Senior Council.

Noted for having received 90 in Real Property (2nd crack). Louis was engaged in the manufacture of hip-boots and the study of medicine before taking up the law. Expects to practice before Equity Courts, because of familiarity with "Bills in Equity." Among his treasured possessions after June 1 will have LL.B.

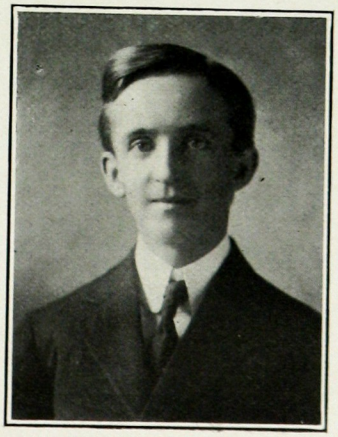


George Vest Triplett, Jr.

Φ Δ Θ.

Kentucky.

Born at Owensboro, Kentucky. Graduated from College of Law of Central University, at Danville, Ky., June, 1907. Entered Law Department, George Washington University, September, 1907. At present in law office of Calhoun & Sizer. Expects to practice law at Owensboro, Ky.



Robert Hite Turner.

Φ Σ K.

Virginia.

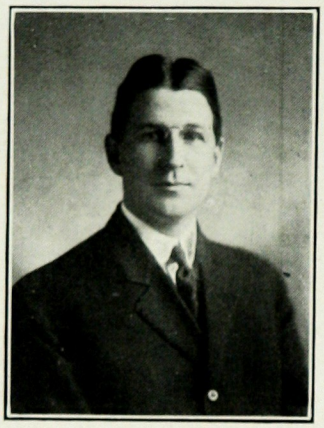
Rob went to the Randolph-Macon Academy, and later graced the halls of Washington & Lee University. He expects to spend another year at G. W. U. and get his LL.M. degree before breaking loose to battle with the "stern realities" of a young lawyer's life. His strong point—or one of his strong points—is Real Property. He's going to write a book on it some day.

FRANK HUBBARD TWYEFFORT.

New York.

Basketball Team, '08; Class Editor, "THE CHERRY TREE;" Chairman Executive Committee; Columbian Debating Society.

Inventor of several remarkable innovations in the baby carriage business; etc., etc. Born in Brooklyn, the home of baby carriages, in 1887, and for some time resided in a baby carriage. Crossed the ocean in a deep-sea-going baby carriage to Paris, where he received his early education.



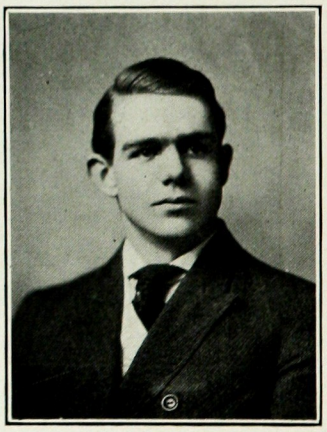
ALEXANDER WILBOURNE WEDDELL.

K A.

Virginia.

Vice-President, '05-'06; Columbian Debating Society; University Congress.

"Weddy," like all true Virginians, came from that State as soon as possible. He is now in Denmark. In spite of his name, he's a bach. He is only six feet two inches, has big feet, and says "kyar" for "car." Expects some day to be Ambassador Extraordinary or Minister Plenipotentiary to Timbuctoo.



WILLIAM KEMPER WEST.

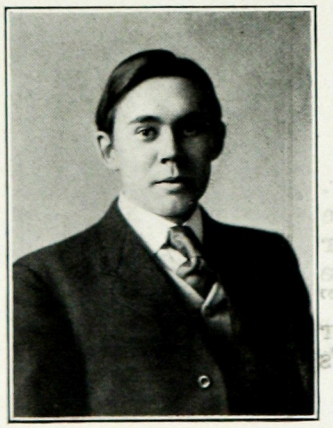
Class Vice-President, '07; Columbian Debating Society.

Born April 24, 1884. Great believer in the argumentative forcefulness of the index finger of the right hand to drive a point home. Refuses to give further information for publication, save that he will practice law somewhere, somehow.



ROBERT CHADWICK WILLIS.

North Carolina.

A.B., Guilford College.

Owes the firm of Weddell & Twyeffort $5.00 for services rendered resulting in his acquittal from the charge of murder. This case was decided in Mr. Justice Earnest's Court, there being but one case on the subject, and that in favor of the defendant.

IRA J. WILSON.

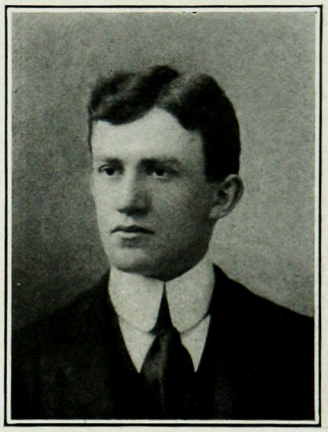
"Wilse" is a native of the Badger State, but the fact his nativity is in the chilly North would never be guessed if he be judged by the warmth of his heart. Is a member of the Bar of the Supreme Court and of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. Wonders why he came to Washington. Hopes some day to hang out a shingle in the "Breezy West."



LESTER H. WOOLSEY.

Our modern Lord Cardinal does not expect to be left "unprotected to mine enemies," and so took law in George Washington University. He was born in New York State on the banks of the Hudson. Class History.

FOR every group, tribe, country, race or community of people who have existed in the annals of mankind there has been raised up some master mind who has inscribed on the tablets of history a record of its doings. Alas and alack, as grand and wonderful an epoch as is the twentieth century, it has failed to produce a genius worthy of portraying to the gaping multitudes the glorious achievements, the mighty characters and colossal undertakings of Law, '09. So it is with a becoming appreciation of his utter unfitness to undertake such a herculean task that your Editor approaches his duty. Critics, be merciful, and do equity unto others as you would have equity done unto you.

Our first meetings were characterized by a feeling which, for the want of a better word, can best be termed "bitter-sweet." How pleasant it was to greet old friends, but how sad to miss from their accustomed places those for whom we used to eagerly watch and wait. A blow indeed it was to learn that Utah had claimed her own and refused to give up her patriotic son, Frank. Sadder still to see that no longer would the army be represented in our midst—we had lost our brave Captain. But tears of anguish fell from many an eye when we learned that Michigan had tempted our beloved "minority leader" and he had fallen. No more would we "deadlock" the elections, for we were "a mob without a head." But small time was given for us to mourn, so burying our sorrows we turned our faces to the distant "Mid-terms," and were soon deep in the mysteries of "evidentiary facts" and "absque hocs."

Vesuvius is never entirely still; neither is Law, '09. The former always gives warning before erupting; so does Law, '09. These mighty truths were never more fully exemplified than in the past fall. For weeks we had been oppressed by work and ennui. "Excitement, excitement everywhere, but not a bit for us." We longed for the good old days when elections and arguments took up most of our afternoons. Sooner than we feared the "IDEA" came. Did you ask who "fathered" it? Who, but our well-known Chief Justice "Charlie," he of the ambition. What was it, did you ask? Give me your ear. Listen. The "Honor-Court." When it was explained to us by "Cholly" we stood amazed and none dared to comment. But soon the whisper passed around that ambition had seized the aforesaid C——— and that the first step to Fuller's (C. J.) position was to be the head of the Honor Court, (supra). Then indeed we rose up in our might and sat down—on the "IDEA." Firmly, gently, with loving hands, Law, '09, spanked the Honor Court into insensibility, and its author into———.

Fast upon the heels of this movement came the change of dynasty. Fortunately, or the opposite, owing to whether you were talking to Gilbert or not, there were no free fights or "Constitutions." With peace rivalling a Y. M. C. A. meeting the "Harvard Hero" gracefully retired and the crown was offered to the "Bowdoin Boy Wonder," on condition that he stay in Washington. He came back from Baltimore long enough to accept, but immediately broke the condition.

Christmas came, and Law, '09, put on its best bib and tucker, sat under the mistletoe, exchanged gifts, drank eggnog and came back with all of the best brands of good resolutions. A sad occurrence, however, caused our return to be somewhat dimmed. The taint of scandal and graft had besmeared two of our number in whom there had been lasting pride and honor. The A. A. U. pronounced the dread verdict "Guilty of Professionalism in the first degree" on our Manager "Scotty" and Captain "Sox." 'Twas a sad spectacle to see these once noble characters blackened and blighted. With heads hung down and the blush of shame on their cheeks they came and went crying the cry of the leper, "Unclean, unclean." Soon, however, the mercy of the executive power mollified and reversed the harsh judicial decision, and we welcomed black into the fold these two black sheep. "Reputations are made and lost in a day" if you are a basket-baller.

So quickly does time pass that the Mid-terms were upon us before we realized it. It was grind, grind, grind, and burn the proverbial midnight oil. But at last the ordeal had to be faced. With the motto "Morituri, salutamus," on our lips we filed in and found it after all only a cold plunge —hard to jump in, but comfortable after you get in. At least that's the way we felt then—I refrain from mentioning our feelings when we receive the little envelope with "less than 70 per cent."

I fain would go on and on recording the incidents of Law, '09, but a cruel editor has allotted me only a short space. The other various joys and sorrows, tears and laughter, successes and failure, must be left to each one's recollection. When coming years shall have tinted our college life into a roseate past, let each one recall the history of Law, '09, and from the recollection thoughts will come bringing tears of joy to the eye. "The sweetest memories of bygone days." And when the day arrives which sends us out into the world, no longer as students of the law, but as lawyers, of a certainty our Alma Mater will say to one and all, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Universitas vs. Freshman Law Class.

Maxima Curia Altissima Legis Departmentatis Universitatis Georgi Washingtonis.

Mid-Winter Term.

Vance, Ch. J.; Thurston, Scott, Earnest and Blair, JJ., presiding.

Error from Lower Court.

This indictment containeth ten several counts.

1. That on the afternoon of Wednesday, October the ninth, Anno Domini 1907, certain raw, green, unknowing, unthinking Freshmen to the number of fifty-five, with malice aforethought and malicious mischief in their hearts, and with intent to damage, desecrate and destroy the peace and quiet of the populace of the Legis Departmentatis of the University did after the hour of Constitutional Law in the hall known by common report at Jurisprudence Hall, together unlawfully assemble and there did so thoughtlessly, riotously and maliciously conduct themselves that the comfort of the public was disturbed to the detriment of the welfare of the said Legis Departmentatis and to the destruction of the peace of his Mightiness the Prexite.

2. That on the same afternoon aforesaid the same men did, with evil intent and purpose, organize themselves into a body, which they did unlawfully denominate the Freshman Law Class of the George Washington University, and said wrongdoers did with great clamor and tumult thereupon endeavor to elect officers to lead the said unlawful organization, with the result that the said unlawful assembly did end in a tremendous strife and riot.

3. That on the afternoon of the next day the said members of the said organization, reduced in numbers by the schism of the preceding night, did in the same Jurisprudence Hall assemble and did there, by ballot, with great tumult and to the discomfort of the public, elect six officers to lead them in their first unlawful acts, to-wit: President, Edward Percy Gates, of Arkansas; Vice-President, John DeMoss Ellis, of Kentucky; Secretary, James Dunbar Dodson, of the District of Columbia; Treasurer, Charles Frederick Black, of Vermont; Cheer Leader, Frank Farnsworth Ford, of Michigan; and Class Editor for "The Cherry Tree," William C. Van Vleck, of the District of Columbia.

4. That these six officers did at divers times thereafter the said Freshman Law Class call to assemble in said hall for the carrying on said organization's unlawful business; wherefore these six officers are hereby indicted on a separate charge.

5. That the said Freshman Law Class did on an evening thereafter assemble in the Halls of the Bank Clerks and there did eat, drink, smoke and be merry, to the scandal of the unsophisticated neighborhood and did sing songs far into the night, so that the peace of the community was disturbed.

6. That on the said evening certain members of the said Freshman Law Class, to-wit, John W. Calvert, Ch. of the Smoker Committee; Edward P. Gates, John DeMoss Ellis and James Dunbar Dodson, did maliciously attempt to make speeches.

7. That one of the members of said organization, to-wit, an auburn-haired youth, Harvey Louis Kitselman, of Indiana, feloniously and with malice aforethought and in the presence of, and to the horror of, all the other members and to their physical, mental and moral detriment, when called on to make a speech, did make instead a pun, to-wit, the words: "I'm always reddy."

8. That the members of said organization have on several occasions wilfully, maliciously and criminally cut, amputated and maimed several classes, lectures, recitations and quizzes conducted by the learned professors of the faculty.

9. That the members of said organization jointly and severally have at different times made divers uncivil, unkind, cutting and derogatory remarks about another organization known as the Sophomore Law Class of the University.

10. That several members of said unlawful organization did one afternoon unlawfully band themselves together and did wilfully, maliciously and violently attack the good youth who acts as doorkeeper at certain times, and that said members did, vi et armis, push the said youth aside and did fraudulently and without their tickets trespass within the sacred precincts of Jurisprudence Hall to the anger and chagrin of the said youth and the detriment of the Lord High Treasurer.

At the trial in the Lower Court it was moved by the counsel for the defendants that the following instructions be given to the jury: "That if the jury, after a careful consideration of the evidence, find that the defendants have done the acts with which they have been charged, not from any evil intent or maliciousness, but as a result of their inexperience, lack of self-control, and unsophisticated greenness, they can then not be held responsible for their acts; and that as regards the ninth count the remarks of the defendants are merely the truth."

These instructions the learned judge refused to give, and instead ruled as follows: "That if the said Freshman Law Class, the defendants, have done what they did voluntarily and intentionally, they should be punished as criminally responsible, for that their ignorance of the laws and customs of the Law Department was no excuse for the violation of them.

Exceptions by the defendant and motion for a new trial.

The opinion of the Greatest High Tribunal was given by Vance, Ch.J.; Thurston, Scott, Earnest and Blair, JJ., concurred.

This case has been thoroughly argued on both sides and in particular the defendants have advanced many ingenious and startling propositions, which give great promise of their ability in the practice of law in the future. It is, however, the opinion of this high court that the learned judge of the lower court was justified in his ruling and that that ruling was abundantly favorable to the defendants.

It is a well-known principle of the law of this department that ignorance of the law is no excuse at examinations. This principle has been thoroughly tested and has now become the settled law, as the many cases in which the defendants have been flunked will bear out.

The only question that might be raised is whether this same principle can be extended to the case of a number of Freshmen just entering upon their term of probation.

It seems to the court that it would be both illogical and against public policy to hold otherwise. Freshmen are by nature green and irresponsible, but at the same time they are just as naturally inclined to have an overwhelming idea of their own importance and an utter disregard for the laws made for them by their superiors.

Therefore, pro bona universitate, it is necessary that they be held responsible for all the results, probable or improbable, natural or unnatural, proximate or remote, which may follow from their wrongful acts; and that they be presumed to know all the laws and customs which have been established for their own good from time immemorial. They have abundant opportunity to learn what is required of them. Any Sophomore or other upper classman would be only too anxious to instruct them. To let them plead ignorance as an excuse for their wrongdoing would simply be to put a premium on that ignorance. There would be no effort on their part to improve themselves or to make themselves acquainted with what they should know.

In this case the fault of the defendants seems particularly flagrant. The assembly at a time when all law-abiding hungry students are seeking refreshment for the inner man, and the consequent riotous proceedings, which tended to disturb the peace and slumber of the janitors, were inexcusable from even the most ignorant. The evening wasted in speechmaking, eating, drinking, smoking and quasi-singing was also most reprehensible in view of the fact that so many of the defendants betrayed such lamentable ignorance in the class recitations for several days following. The making of puns and the mayhem and cutting of classes, recitations, etc., are also offenses of the most serious nature, and an example should be made of the offenders in such cases.

The defendants should have known that the youth who stopped them at the door of Jurisprudence Hall and demanded to see their tickets had been placed there by the authority of the law and they should have respected that authority even to the extent of paying their tuition.

As to the ninth count it is agreed by the court that their defense, that the derogatory remarks about the Sophomore Law Class were true, does not hold good. These remarks were indeed true. The said Sophomore Class deserved them and received only their just due. But the principle that "the greater the truth the greater the libel" can well apply here. The defendants had no legal right to make such derogatory remarks, and such remarks being true were extremely likely to lead to a breach of the peace and tranquility of the realm.

By unanimous decision the judgment of the lower court is hereby affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

Class History.

Deer Edditur: Fur the luv of Moses, make our clas his story orijinul. Don't tel us awl about hazing freshmen, and flunking, and using ponies and hundreds of other stunts that are as old as the hills. Ov course we done all them things, and so hav awl the other classes before us. What we want is a record of orijinul stunts.

We hope yew will do yore best to carry out the wishes of yore clas.

(Signed) CLASS OF 1908, N. C. P.

THE above admirably constructed, hortatory missive, relieves the writer of responsibility for any statement, or statements, herein made, which might otherwise have been considered objectionable. Our motto, therefore, is "Originality at any cost."

We ask you, dear reader, to glance over the appended list of selected, original doings, and decide whether we have done our duty, as requested by our class.

We contributed more funds, proportionate to our numbers, toward retaining athletics in the University than any class in the University; thus earning the distinction of THE BANNER CLASS.

We were the first class in the N. C. P. to be continuously represented on the Hatchet Staff.

We originated and successfully conducted the first All Pharmacy Smoker.

We were the first class in the history of the N. C. P. to win an office in the Association of Class Presidents.

We won the championship of our Department both in baseball and football for three consecutive years.

Five members of our class took the Board of Pharmacy examinations before graduation, and five passed.

We were the first class in the N. C. P. to take the courses in Mercantile Pharmacy and Pharmaceutical Jurisprudence.

We ate more dog sandwiches and free lunch, and survived the ordeal better, than any previous class.

Our only co-ed did not forget her age!

We were the first Pharmacy class to select a class pin which did not have a mortar and pestle on it.

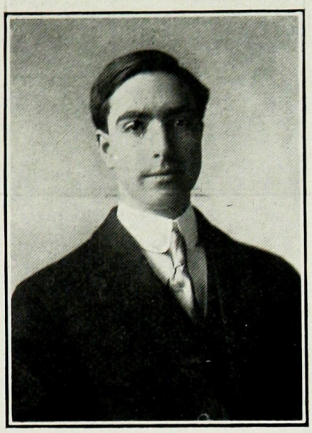
Every member of our class, except our one co-ed, played on both baseball and football teams.

"Recapitulatory."

We do not like to boast, but we are the most modest (?) and veracious (?) class that ever left a hall of learning.

If this brief general synopsis of classy stunts has interested you, you are hereby invited to inspect the following remarkable collection of individuals.

Pharmaceutical Phenomena.



W. Robey Boyer.

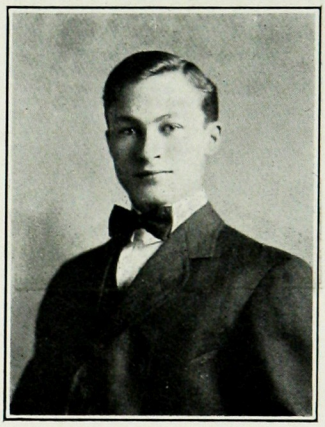
Class Teams, '05-'06-'07-'08.

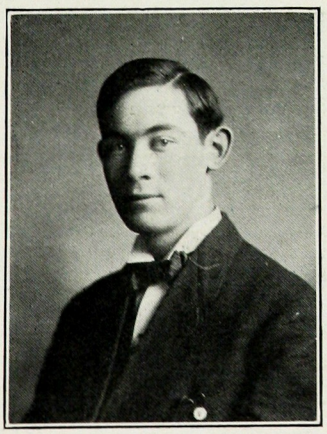
This country swain first sniffed the aroma of mince pie September 17, 1883, near Damascus, Maryland. After a public school education this precocious youngster managed a farm for four years prior to entering the N. C. P. in 1905. Though not a star athlete, he played creditably on his class teams. He is a charter member of Pi Pi, the Senior Lunch Club.

Carroll Graham Deming.

Class Treasurer, '06-'07-'08; Class Teams, '05-'06-'07-'08.

Carroll "Microscopy" Deming uttered his first witty saying March 26, 1885, in this city, and has been doing the same ever since. He laughed his way through the public schools and a business course in Technical High School, arriving at the N. C. P. in 1905. He was an active athlete, playing on both football and baseball teams. Was accidentally elected treasurer in 1906, and was similarly reelected in 1907. He possesses untiring ability to whistle the same old tune. Charter member of Pi Pi.





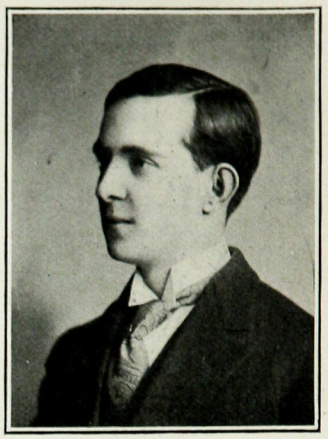
Henry Bussey Floyd.

Treasurer, Association of Class Presidents, '07-'08; Class Secretary, '05-'06; Class President, '05-'06-'07-'08; Class Teams, '05-'06-'07-'08; Oragnizer Pi Pi.

This determined-looking youngster wielded his first gavel twenty-one years ago in Pearsall, Texas. Was the originator of the All-Pharmacy Smoker and first N. C. P. man to fill an office in the Association of Class Presidents. Was class president two years. One of our star athletes. Is destined to become either President of the United States or organizer of a Drug Trust?

Morris A. Pozen.

Vice-President, '05-'06, '06-'07; Class Secretary, '07-'08; The Hatchet, '07-'08, "The Cherry Tree;" Class Teams, '05-'06-'07-'08.



M. Ananias Pozen began grafting and prevaricating January 22, 1887, in a little Russian town, the name of which is withheld for lack of space. The Russian language was too hard, so he skipped to the U. S., landed in Connecticut, slipped through the public schools of Washington, suffered four years of Latin at Central High School, landing at the N. C. P. in 1905. Because no one else was fool enough to take the jobs he was made class secretary, pharmacy editor for The Hatchet and Class Editor for the Annual.

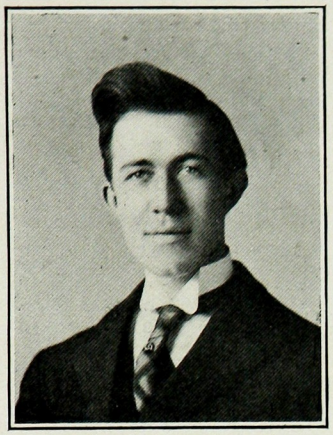
Earle Kent Richardson.

Class Teams, '07-'08.

This dignified pill-roller first earned the nickname "Doc" in Wade, Ohio, 24 years ago. After primary education in the public schools of that place he came to Washington, engaged in the practice of pharmacy and entered the N. C. P. Is of a quiet, retiring nature, but has always responded to calls for aid in class or university affairs. Was one of the lucky ones to pass the registration examinations in his Senior year. Our best wishes follow him.

Mary Hanlon Richardson.

Look well, dear reader, upon these classic features, for their owner possesses two distinctions which rarely fall to lovely woman. In the first place she has not forgotten her age—acknowledging twenty-two summers. Secondly, she is the only representative of her sex in this illustrious class. That no better representative could have been chosen is the verdict of all who know her. Mary first smiled in Wade, Ohio, came to Washington before railroad passes were abolished, and decided to grace the N. C. P. by her presence. She has hypnotized the faculty and will receive the degree of Doctor of Pharmacy. She is ambitious, and intends to become proprietor of a first-class pharmacy.



GUSTAVE HUGO SCHULZE, JR.

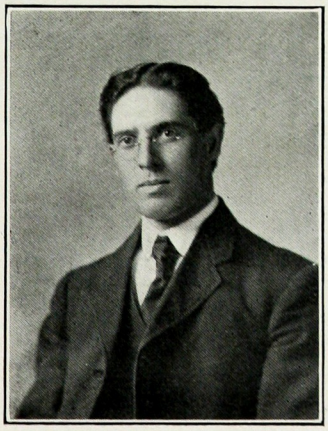
Class Teams, '07-'08.

This genial German quaffed his first stein twenty-two years ago right here in the District. After passing through the public schools, he entered the N. C. P. He has never been able to get to lectures on time, but believing in the maxim "better late than never," he came when he could. In spite of this shortcoming, Gustave managed to hoodoo the District Board of Pharmacy into registering him and has been happy ever since.

ROBERT BRUCE SPENCER.

Vice-President, '07-'08; Sergeant-at-Arms, '05-'06; Class Teams, '05-'06-'07-'08.

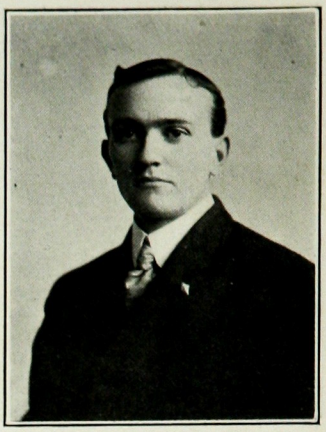
Here you have the handsome, raven-locked visage of R. B. Spencer, who began philosophizing in South Mills, North Carolina, August 27, 1887. After absorbing all the philosophy from the public schools of North Carolina and Falls Church, Va., the dazzle of the soda fountain dragged him into the drug business, which accounts for his presence at the N. C. P. in 1905. Is responsible for many clever sayings, the climax being his excellent little speech at the All-Pharmacy Smoker.



ERNEST HAMILTON STEELE.

President, '05-'06; Class Teams, '05-'06-'07-'08.

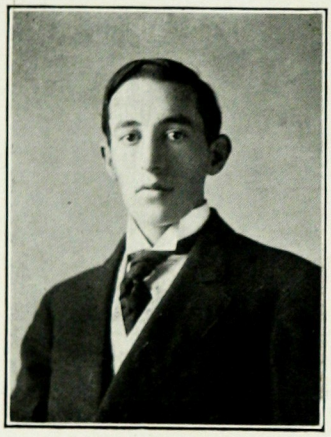
Our only railroad representative first dreamed of rolling pills in 1878 at Greenville, Va. After preliminary education in the Old Dominion State, he entered the N. C. P. in 1905. Is a deep student, reasons clearly and expresses his opinions frankly. Was elected President in Freshman year, but has refused offices ever since in order to let others share the honors. His ambition has been to get out of Chemistry lab. ahead of Spencer (which he did—ONCE).



Richard B. Thibadean.

Treasurer, '05-'06; Class Teams, '05-'06-'07-'08.

This quiet young pestle-wielder first tasted watermelon in Atlanta, Ga., February 14, 1887. After preliminary education in Georgia and Virginia, he was attracted to the N. C. P. in 1905. Is of a very quiet and retiring disposition. Says little, but means what he says. Guarded the class funds in Freshman year. Played on class teams, but does not favor athletics. Although he has never been a cut-up, he intends to study medicine, specializing on surgery.



Milton Chase Thompson.

Class Teams, '07-'08.

This genius first longed to act as a public accommodation November 16, 1886, in the District. Assimilated preliminary knowledge in the public schools and the Eastern High School, entering the N. C. P. in 1904. Liking the class of 1905, he waited for us and joined us in the Fall of 1906. He is truly a marvel, as he is the only man to pass the District Board Examinations, make a high mar[illegible] and all this without the use of a spatula.

William Daniel Alphonse Thorn.

Class Teams, '05-'06-'07-'08.

There was a young fellow named Thorn,
Whose name reached from here to Cape Horn;
He is tall (?) and he's handsome (?)
But he can't close a transom.
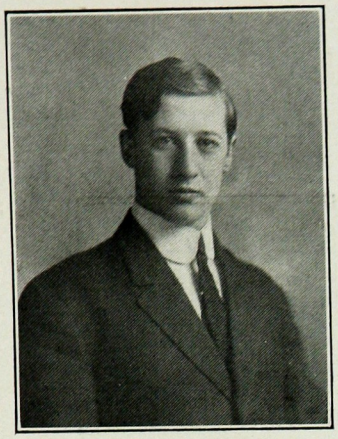
Which makes his sweet face so forlorn.

The diminutive possessor of the above lengthy cognomen came to light Oct. 3, 1887, in Georgetown, D. C., but is otherwise apparently sane.



TAYLOR O. TIMBERLAKE.

Secretary, '06-'07; Class Teams, '05-'06-'07-'08.

This handsome youth first burned the midnight oil in Staunton, Va., in 1888. He came to Washington in 1903, graduated from Business High School and entered the N. C. P. in 1905. Has always been known as "the student." Was a star on both baseball and football teams. Class Secretary '06-'07. Discarded the expression "well — er" in Senior year. Thinks organic chemistry "a beautiful study." Intends to enter G. W. U. Medical Department after completing pharmacy course.

Treasurer,
FRANK A. ROBEY.

Class Editor, "THE CHERRY TREE,"
IRENE NELLIE RICHARDSON.

Class History.

IN September, 1906, a number of boys and one girl gathered together at the College of Pharmacy and formed the Class of 1909. There did not seem to be anything unusual about the appearance of this class, but things are seldom as they seem. When we assembled to begin our Junior year's work, in the fall of 1907, there were sixteen of us to fight the battle through. Three old Juniors taking pity on our small number, decided to increase it to nineteen. So here we are—nineteen strong, enthusiastic Juniors.

One more year and we will be full-fledged Doctors of Pharmacy. We have been tortured by quizzes and examinations for two years, and I know we will be able to stand it for one more long year. It is rather hard to have to sit and listen to some of the words and phrases thrown at us in Materia Medica, and also rather hard to comprehend some of those terrible chemical reactions. But what we don't understand more than anything else is why we have to be made to "see things" once a week in Microscopy.

There was a lively time at the class election, and as a result, Mr. M. B. Tewksbury was elected President. Since one name has been mentioned, perhaps you would like to hear about some more of us. So, here goes:

In the class is a genuine prodigy, named Edward V. Payne, and it pains us to think of how much he knows and how little the rest of us know. There is an artist from Missouri, who says his name is simply "T. Quinn Jones," and another man of the same surname, from Virginia, who thinks only of work.

It was thought proper that our class have some one older than the rest of us to look after it, so "Papa" Crosen returned to our ranks. Virginia is well represented in the Class of '09 by the celebrated persons of Gill, Bury, "Doc" Milburn, Dan Payne and Robey. Nolan from the West and Reese from Maryland both honor our class with their presence. Last, but not least, are those from dear old "D. C." Bailey of the "Rooters' Club," "Shorty" Harbaugh, Hanback, Hughes, Senay, Jr., "Prof." Salb and Irene Richardson.

Next year there will be a little more to tell about each one of us, as we will be ready to start out upon our life's career, with the degree of Phar. D.

Class History.

THE National College of Pharmacy opened for its twenty-sixth year with a Freshman Class of twenty-five members, which is the size of the average entering class. On October 14 a meeting was held to organize the class. The election of Class Officers was our first business, which, as is evident, was satisfactorily concluded.

After considerable discussion it was decided to have a class pin. Messrs. Moyer and Hogan were nominated to secure designs and estimates.

It was also decided that a monthly assessment of 25 cents be made.

The second meeting of the class was held on October 21, to consider whether or not to have a Hallowe'en Party. A committee on arrangement was appointed by the President. This committee was composed of Messrs. Henderson, Moyer and Davis.

The committee on pins report to the class that they had secured a design which they considered satisfactory. The class voted to accept the pin presented by the committee. At the special meeting, held October 23, it was decided to accept the generous offer of Miss Strobel, who volunteered to give us the use of her home.

The committee distributed the class pins and all the members of the class seemed pleased.

The class had a delightful old-fashioned Hallowe'en gathering and everybody enjoyed themselves immensely.

The next meeting of the class was held December 3 to consider the idea of cooperating with the Junior and Senior classes in giving a theatre party and smoker, at which the faculty were invited to be present. It was decided to cooperate with the upper class men. President Lampman was elected to represent us on the Management Committee.

On the 16th of December, our mid-year exams. began; the first being Prof. Kalusowski's exam. in Pharmacy. On Wednesday, the 18th of December, we had Prof. Holton's exam. in Analytical Chemistry. Prof. Hillebrand postponed his exam. until January 8th.

On December 18th school closed for the Christmas holidays. We were all notified by our President that the theatre party and smoker would be held on Friday, December 27th, the play being "Miss Hook of Holland," at the Columbia, and the smoker at Fritz Reuter's Hotel.

There were about thirty-five at the smoker, including the members of the faculty, Professors Kalusowski, Waggaman, Hillebrand, Bradbury and Castell.

After enjoying a fine spread and some refreshments we smoked some of Fritz Reuter's Havanas and heard some fine toasts and reminiscences by the toastmaster, Mr. Floyd, '08, and the members of the faculty and student body until the wee hours of Saturday morning. The students voted the affair a rousing success, and the Committee of Management were the recipients of many congratulations.

Lectures were resumed on January 6 and on January 8 we had Prof. Hillebrand's exam. in General Chemistry and Physics, and by the smiles on most of the faces of the Class of '10 it looked as though everybody got through the midyear exams. satisfactorily.

On January 25 G. W. U. held its first indoor meet, at which N. C. P. was represented by a relay team to compete in the inter-department relay race of 1,200 yards. The N. C. P. team was composed of two Juniors and two Freshmen; the Freshmen were Mr. Kenner and Mr. Moyer.

As this was the first athletic team of any kind that N. C. P. has ever sent out, the result was much more gratifying than it looks upon paper, because it shows that we have good material, which, with proper training, would show up better at future events.

On January 27 President Lampman called a meeting to announce to the class that he had been directed by the "Association of Class Presidents of G. W. U." to ask each student to contribute one dollar towards raising the deficit of $1,200 in the treasury of the Athletic Association; a good per cent of the class contributed and the general opinion was that the class wanted to retain athletics in the University.

After some discussion it was decided to elect a new editor for The Hatchet and CHERRY TREE. Mr. B. J. Davis was elected to succeed Mr. Hogan.

The annual examinations for promotion will begin on April 30, and the entire class is looking forward to being Juniors.

The class unite in agreeing that the lectures and laboratory work have been very interesting, and they thank the members of the faculty for their effort in helping them. We regret very much that Mr. Bramhall had to discontinue, but hope to see him back next year.

The Half-Back and the Necklace.

LOW affair, I call it," said Hugh. He slapped his compaion on the back. "Let's step outside and have a smoke and then beat it."

"You're on," said Jack, and they made their way together through the crowded room to where a hallway led to a door communicating with an outer refuge.

Hugh was tall and broad. His chum was wont to say, "Hugh is as near an approach to the Gibson man as this imperfect world will ever produce." Jack himself was a good three inches shorter, but appeared tall in an average company.

It was an evening in early April. They had tried Oriental art the first part of the evening. Then Jack had thumped on the piano a while with Hugh accompanying him with a deep bass. Soon this palled, and they sat for a few minutes smoking in silence. Finally, Jack remembered an invitation to some sort of an affair at Mrs. Smedley's. He could not remember just what is was, but they donned their dress-suits and took a chance. "We're stung, and serves us right," said Jack. "There's not a girl here under forty, and" as they passed the billiard room, "they're using both tables, so there's no chance for us. Look, Hugh," he exclaimed suddenly, "what's that?"

Standing watching the game was a very little man with a very large head of hair. As he turned away for a moment he disclosed a pair of heavy green spectacles. Underneath these a bushy gray moustache and wide-spreading whiskers concealed the rest of his features.

"Hugh," declared Jack, firmly, "no one has a right to look like that. Why, he's all hair. Do you suppose he can't afford to get it cut? But, then, what's he doing at an affair like this, if that's the case?" They had reached the veranda and stopped to light up. "Suppose," Jack continued thoughtfully, "someone wrote him an anonymous letter requesting him to get a haircut and a shave. Or get his whiskers trimmed, anyway. Yes," he ruminated, "he ought to be willing to get them trimmed, anyway. That would only be ten or fifteen cents. Hugh, do you think he would get them trimmed if one asked him politely?"

"Oh, dry up," said Hugh. "Maybe he's an anarchist or a musician."

"He certainly looks the part, then. But, say, it's coming out here."

The little man with the plethora of hair had come out on the veranda, and was approaching them.

"May I trouble one of you gentlemen for a light," he asked, displaying a large cigar.

Jack favored him, wondering why he had not obtained a light in the billiard room. He showed no disposition to go, but on the contrary engaged them in conversation.

"If I am not mistaken," he observed, "I have met you before. Aren't you Mr. Sommers, the famous half-back, and you Mr. Towers, the equally famous quarter-back? I believe I had the pleasure of meeting you at the Hammonds' ball."

"As, yes; I remember," said Jack politely—in reality he did not remember meeting any such person at the event in question.

"Let me see," said Hugh, "your name is——"

"Howard."

"Oh, yes, Howard. Have you heard whether Mrs. Ashton's necklace has been recovered yet, Mr. Howard?"

Mr. Howard glanced at them curiously.

"I believe not," he said. "I understand that detectives are on the trail of the guilty parties, and that unless restitution is made shortly they will be apprehended."

"Indeed," remarked Jack. The conversation was beginning to bore both of them, and as soon as possible they made their escape and went to bid good-bye to their hostess.

"Jack," said Hugh suddenly, "who's that girl over there?"

"Who, the one with the fluffy top-knot and the eyes that won't behave? That's Mrs. Brooks with her, though. She's not at all difficult to look at, is she?"

"Don't be flippant, my boy. She's a dream. I'm going over and get a knock down."

"Don't do it. Remember that one you were crazy to meet at the Hammonds'? And then it turned out that she was engaged to a Cornell fellow, who turned up later and carried her off."

"Never mind, it can't happen twice that way," and Hugh made his way over to the girl and was promptly introduced.

Left alone, Jack wandered into the billiard room and was challenged by Mr. Howard, who seemed to be omnipresent. Jack was rather proud of his billiard game, and therefore in no sweet humor when his antagonist won two games by phenomenal runs just as he was about to win "I'll take my revenge another time, Mr. Howard," he said at the conclusion of the second game, "at present I must rescue my friend from the toils of femininity and carry him off."

This proved to be a difficult task. In vain Jack signalled to him in their private code. Hugh and his fair friend were holding an animated conversation, which bade fair to last indefinitely. At last Jack gave up in disgust and took his leave. Arriving at his room Jack hid the matches, strewed the furniture around as much as possible, then turned off the gas and got in bed. Hugh burst in about a half-hour later, fell over the Morris chair and swore fluently. Then he groped around on the mantelpiece for the matches, and failing to find them outdid his previous effort. Finally he discovered a match in his pocket, lit the gas and peered suspiciously at his sleeping chum.

"If he dodges this, he's awake," he murmured. He poised a sofa-pillow over his head and let drive for Jack's cherubic countenance. Even as it flew through the air Jack's head disappeared under the covers.

"I thought as much," said Hugh. "Now, come out of that—I want to tell you all about it."

"Well, cut it short, then," said Jack, reappearing.

"The long and the short of it is, she lives at B —— and she has invited both of us to a party at her house tomorrow night."

"The devil she has," exclaimed Jack. "She doesn't know me."

"Often admired you from a distance. Heard all about you, and so on."

"Get out. I will not be soft-soaped. You probably promised you would bring me to look out for an elderly cousin or something of the sort. Anyway, I have an engagement with that committee to arrange for the Southern trip of the team; that comes off at six o'clock and will probably last a couple of hours. When is the last train that I would be able to make it on?"

"Let me see, there is one at 5:31, which I will take. It gets there at 6:45. I'll go to the Frazier House and get a room for both of us for the night. Then I will have plenty of time to get dinner, dress and go. Now, there is another train at 7:05 which gets in at 8:01. If you can catch that one you can make it all right."

"Well, we'll see. And now get in bed—I want to get some sleep tonight if possible."

It was nearly train time when Hugh dashed into the station the next day. The hands of the large clock above the door pointed to half-past five and the waiting room was rapidly emptying itself of its occupants. Hugh had to wait at the window while a fussy man with mutton-chop whiskers disputed with the ticket agent. As he waited impatiently he noticed a small man sitting on a bench from which he could see both the clock and the gate to the trains. He glanced from the paper he was reading to the clock and then to the gate and then back to the paper again. Hugh wondered why he did not get on board if he was going on the 5:31, but concluded he was waiting for someone.

The man in front of him finally obtained a ticket to his liking and Hugh soon purchased his and made a sprint for the gate. As he passed the bench where the little man had been sitting he noticed a small paper parcel on it. He picked it up and looked around for the man. He was just outside the gate and making for the train. While Hugh was showing his ticket at the gate the man had gotten on board and the train was beginning to move slowly. After a short but exciting chase he caught it and dropped into a seat with a sigh of relief. "And now," he said, "I'll go and give the old boy his package. He'll probably offer me a thousand dollars reward, but I will be firm and refuse it."

Accordingly Hugh hunted through all the cars, but to no purpose. The object of his search seemed to have vanished. "Well, I'll try again in a half-hour," he thought. But his second endeavor was as fruitless as the first. "Strange, passing strange," he mused. "I guess I'd better keep it for the present. If it has anything valuable in it he will advertise." And so he thrust the package in his pocket and forgot about it for the time being.

After dinner Hugh went to his room in the hotel and began to dress with the comfortable leisure of one who knows he has plenty of time. He opened his suit case with some anxiety; he had packed it in a hurry and was afraid he had forgotten his studs or something equally essential. On the contrary an inventory showed him that he had possessed himself of both Jack's and his own patent leather shoes.

"Whew, Jack will be sore!" he thought. "He will have to come here to the hotel for them—that is, if he has sense enough to discover that I've taken them. Well, it can't be helped now," and he began to disrobe.

He had just removed his coat and vest when there was a knock at the door. Without waiting for a response the door opened and a man entered. He was rather short, with close-cut brown hair, a gray suit and brown derby. In absolute silence he took a seat near the door, keeping his eyes fixed on Hugh.

"Well," said the latter, gazing at him in astonishment, "don't you think you have made a mistake? This is not your room, you know."

"Mr. Hugh Sommers, I believe?" said the little man pleasantly. "Mr. Hugh Sommers, I have the honor to inform you you are under arrest."

Hugh stood regarding the stranger with wide-open eyes. He rapidly reviewed all the events of the college year in his mind. To be sure, there were one or two escapades that might have attracted the notice of the local police, but it hardly seemed probable that they would have followed him to B ——— when he could have been arrested at any time at college.

"Come now," said the detective persuasively, "you had better give it up to me and we will make it as light for you as possible. In fact, I think if you make a full confession it need never be known except by two or three."

"Give what up?" demanded Hugh, who was becoming more mystified than ever.

"Give what up? Why, Mrs. Ashton's diamond necklace, of course."

"Mrs. Ashton's diamond necklace!" So the detective actually suspected him of the necklace robbery.

"Indeed," he said; "may I ask what makes you have the extraordinary theory that I had anything to do with the necklace?"

"Well," said the detective rather complacently, "I don't mind telling you how I found it out."

"Do you mind if I dress while you tell it?" asked Hugh; "for as soon as I have convinced you that you are on the wrong track altogether, I am going out for the evening."

"I have no objection at all to your dressing," he replied, "although it may be somewhat difficult to convince me."

Hugh began changing into his evening clothes, pausing now and then to listen more closely to the detective. The latter began:

"Well, you know on the evening in question I was especially employed by the hostess to keep an eye on the servants—there was a great deal of jewelry worn that evening and a number of extra servants had been hired. Now, Mrs. Ashton, as you know, was wearing her diamond necklace, which is supposed to be worth $10,000 or thereabouts. Immediately after supper she strolled into the conservatory, by herself, as it happened. While there she sat down a while, and it seems that, it being warm in there and she being tired, she fell into a dose. She doesn't know how long she slept, but when she awoke the necklace was gone. She missed it immediately and notified her hostess. The latter immediately ordered a search of all the servants, which was made. Mrs. Ashton would not hear of the guests being searched. All this is, of course, no news to you.

"Now, I was put on the case. The first thing I did was to find out who had been in the conservatory at about that time. This was rather hard to do, as the guests had been strolling in and out all evening. But I finally narrowed the search until I had left only you and two other persons. This left you three to choose between. By various methods, which are interesting, but would take too long to tell, I eliminated the other two persons. Then I began to make inquiries about you. I found, in the first place, you are a jeweler's son, which was suspicious."

"Why?" asked Hugh.

"Well, in the first place, you probably knew the value of precious stones well enough to know the worth of a necklace like Mrs. Ashton's at a glance. And then, again, you would probably know how such things could be disposed of."

"Go on," said Hugh. He didn't know whether to be amused or angry. He thought of an alibi he could prove, if necessary; and, then, a search of him and all of his belonging would, of course, fail to reveal the necklace. But, then, it would delay his engagement or perhaps even make him break it.

"I also found out as a result of my inquiries," continued the detective, "that you bet a large sum of money on a recent athletic event—I believe it was running—and lost. That accounts for your reason for taking it. A man has been shadowing you ever since the ball, and you have made no attempt to dispose of it. But last night he thinks he was seen by you, which would account for your sudden trip. You probably thought that as the hue and cry was dying down you could run over to B——— and dispose of it, but when you suspected that you were being shadowed you determined to get rid of it in some way."

"Now, see here," said Hugh, beginning to get angry, "if this is a joke, it's a mighty poor one, and if it's not, all I've got to say that you'll find yourself absolutely wrong. That night I did wander into the conservatory for a few minutes, but all the time I was in plain sight of several people. And, then, I would like to know how I could get rid of a $10,000 diamond necklace the description of which has been sent to every jeweler and pawnbroker east of the Mississippi?"

"I suppose, then," said the detective, "you won't object to having your things searched?"

"Certainly not," Hugh replied; "go as far as you like. I know exactly what I've got with me. Wait a minute, though, I have something here you had better take charge of. A man left it on the seat in the railway station as I was coming here to-day. I tried to find him, but couldn't. Perhaps it's an infernal machine."

The detective took the package and opened it slowly. "So you decided to give up," he said. "Well, why not own up to the whole thing?" and he tumbled something out on the table that glittered and sparkled. It was the diamond necklace!

To say that Hugh was thunderstruck would hardly express it. He fell back into a chair absolutely dazed. He opened his mouth to speak, when the door opened and Jack Towers appeared. He stopped on the threshhold and looked in astonishment from Hugh to the detective and then to the necklace on the table.

"What the ——!" he said.

"Sit down, Mr. Towers," said the detective; "perhaps you wonder what has happened."

"Wait a minute," Hugh interrupted, "I'll tell him." And in a nervous, excited manner he told Jack everything that had happened. He had great faith in his chum's resources, and hoped he would find some explanation. When he had finished Jack walked over to the table and picked up the necklace.

"Are you absolutely sure this is Mrs. Ashton's necklace?" he asked.

"It certainly looks like it," said Hugh. He took it over under the light and began examining the stones. "I remember noticing some of these diamonds. Here!" he suddenly cried, "what's this?" He held the stones up to the light and turned them around and examined them closely. Then he said excitedly, "Why, these jewels are paste!"

"Ah," said the detective dryly, "I'm not quite that green, Mr. Sommers. You would hardly have been carrying them around all this time if they were paste."

"Now, see here, Mr. Detective," said Jack, "you are going a little bit too far in this. My friend says they are paste, and he ought to know. In that case the real thief probably discovered it and left the jewels where he knew they would be found, either to direct suspicion to someone else or to get rid of them merely. Now——"

He was interrupted by the opening of the door and the entrance of a tall, thin man whom the detective seemed to recognize.

"My assistant, gentlemen," he said.

Jack thought the assistant looked rather sheepish over something.

"Anything new," asked the detective.

"Everything," said the assistant, laconically. "I was sent for this morning by Mrs. Ashton, who gave me this note to be taken to you immediately. Then as I got off the car at B———— Bill Leavitt—you know who I mean—hailed me and gave me this note to bring to you," and he delivered up both notes to his chief.

"You watch these two men for a minute while I read them, will you?" The tall, thin man sat down and solemnly winked, first at Hugh and then at Jack. They, mystified, looked from him to the detective and back again.

The detective suddenly rose. "Gentlemen," he said, "I owe you both, and Mr. Sommers especially, an apology. This first note, from Mrs. Ashton, says that by the mistake of a maid, instead of wearing her diamond necklace that night she wore a paste one which she had had recently made and which was so like the genuine that she herself could not tell them apart. And this second note is from a man who is a sort of a go-between for the police and professional criminals. He says that the man who did the job discovered the jewels were paste when he tried to dispose of one small one and that he then sent the necklace to him, who was to deliver it up to the police. And that his messenger claimed to have lost it on the way. Do I make myself clear?"

"Clear enough," said Hugh, "and next time I would advise you to be less free with your suspicions. And, now, we will have to hurry if we are going to that party."

"One moment," said Jack, who had commenced to change his shoes which he had discovered on the bed. "Mr. Detective," the detective had left the room but came back to the door, "your voice somehow sounds familiar to me. Have I ever met you before?"

"As 'Mr. Howard,' yes," said that worthy.

"Oh," said Jack, as a great wave of comprehension swept over him. "Well, you're a better billiard player than you are a detective."

"Just nine," said Hugh, as they were left alone. "We'll be late, but not too late."

As they turned out the light and started for the elevator Jack drew a long sigh of relief.

"I knew those whiskers couldn't be real, Hugh," he said.

The Association of Class Presidents.

Officers.

President,
H. W. Houghton.

Vice-President,
H. M. Tayloe.

Secretary,
C. W. Garlock.

Treasurer,
H. B. Floyd.

THE Association of Class Presidents was organized in 1904 as a high tribunal to consider all matters related to the student-body of the University. It is composed of the presidents of every class in the University, which consists of, at present, nineteen classes, namely: one from the school of Graduate Studies, four from the Columbian College, five from the College of Medicine, three from the College of Law, three from the College of Dentistry and three from the College of Pharmacy. As each president earnestly realizes the exact sentiments of his respective class, and thus acts as a representative of his class in the decision of every important question in regard to the welfare of the students, such as the means of retaining athletics, etc., the Association of Class Presidents is justly a representative body of the Students of this University. This Association has the control of The Cherry Tree, the Annual of the University.

This year the Association has been more active than ever before. It has taken hold of the athletics and put them on a sound financial basis. It took hold of the Students' Ball and made it more of a students' function than ever before. There is not any need of giving all of the things that have been accomplished this year by this organization, as space is valuable, but every member of this Association is to be congratulated for his excellent attendance and spirit, which has been demonstrated at every meeting. Whatever the Association has undertaken to accomplish has been thoroughly discussed by every member. If it passed affirmatively, every member of the organization has realized that it was his duty to see that it was successful. With this as our sentiment, it is our sincere wish that the University may prosper.

H. W. Houghton

In the making up of the Athletic Deficit the Association of Class Presidents announces the following as the Honor Classes of the University:

Freshman Law.

Senior Pharmacy.

These honors were awarded on the following basis: First, to the class raising the most money, having an enrollment of more than fifty; second, to the class raising the most money, having an enrollment of less than fifty.

UNIVERSITY Y. M. C. A. CLUB

The Young Men's Christian Association of George Washington University.

Officers, 1907-1908.

President,
ERNEST R. EATON.

Vice-President,
ROBERT F. FLEMING.

Secretary,
HADLEIGH MARSH.

Treasurer,

Besides these events are other activities, comprising Bible Study Clubs, meeting each week in the University Building; a special Chapel Service held each Friday at noon in West Hall, and one other special student gathering addressed by a prominent speaker to men.

SECOND ANNUAL BANQUET OF G. W. U. STUDENT Y. M. C. A. CLUB.
ATTENDANCE, 150.

The Young Women's Christian Association.

George Washington University.

OFFICERS Y. W. C. A. 1907-1908

The George Washington University Chapter of the Young Women's Christian Association was established in the University in the fall of 1906. This chapter, though so recently founded, has grown fast and accomplished much good work for the institution.

The officers for the year of '07-'08 are:

President,
JANE MAHAN.
Vice-President,
JESSAMINE SWARTWOUT.
Treasurer,
MARGARET NEWTON.
Secretary,
HELEN SUMMY.
Chairman Social Committee,
RUTH GILBERT COCHRAN.
Faculty Adviser,
HARRIET STRATTON ELLIS.

The first of the social and financial successes of the Y. W. C. A. was the well-remembered luncheon given by the Association, April 26, 1907, for the benefit of the Girls' Reception Room. Since that time the chapter has held many pleasant gatherings, and hopes to establish a Y. W. C. A. banquet as a yearly affair for the women students of the University.

CLASSICAL CLUB

THE Classical Club, which is composed of instructors and advanced students in Greek and Latin and Classical Archæology, meets monthly for the more detailed discussion of special topics in ancient life literature, and art than is ordinarily possible in the class room. At each meeting a paper is read, reviews of recent classical publications are presented and reports are made from various sites of archæological excavation. Teachers and patrons of the classics in Washington are admitted as associate members, and at open meetings the club avails itself, when possible, of the services of eminent scholars from other universities who may be temporarily in the city.

In the list of honorary members who have addressed the Club are Prof. Louis Dyer, of Oxford University; Prof. Francis W. Kelsey, of the University of Michigan; Dr. George Horton, United States Consul to Athens; Prof. Kirby Flower Smith, of Johns Hopkins University; Prof. Thomas Day Seymour, of Yale University, and Prof. Wilfred P. Mustard, of Haverford College.

THE Senior Medical Class has been noted for doing things since it entered G. W. U. One outgrowth of this aggressive spirit is the Sterling Ruffin Medical Society, named in honor of the present Professor of Practice in the Medical Department; this is but the outgrowth of an abortive attempt made in the fall of 1906 to organize such a society, before the material which the average Junior Medic carries within his cranium had reached that quantity or high state of perfection which is an almost unconscious possession of the Senior.

Credit must be given to John R. Littlefield, the Class Editor of "The Cherry Tree," for pushing this matter to a successful conclusion; and the Society so much realized the value of his endeavors that he was made President by acclamation.

The Committee on Organization was composed of John R. Littlefield, Frank J. Brown, and F. Clarence Weber, and this aggregation of men, already famous in their own fields of pharmacy, chemistry, and finance, launched the new creation successfully on December 2, 1907.

The memebrship is limited to Senior Medical students, Professors in the Department of Medicine, and the Medical Alumni. The purpose is for the Senior Class in each school year to take the work up where left off by the graduating class of the previous year, thus making it a perpetual organization.

Meetings have been held the first and third Saturday evenings of each month, where papers of intense interest, bearing especially on the theory and practice of internal medicine, have been produced, many of which would do credit to the highest organizations of the profession. The object of the Society is to consider the diagnosis and treatment of diseases, and to prepare the members of the graduating class each year to enter on the association work, when they enter on their chosen work.

May each graduate from G. W. U., and each member of the Sterling Ruffin Medical Society, become a shining light in the medical profession, and an honor to our Alma Mater. HERBERT S. PYNE, Secretary.

The discovery by several promising Junior medical men of an antitoxin for the Bacillus Morpheus (lately isolated) and the demonstration of its great value in the treatment of Junioritis Medici, a description of a severe type of which, prevalent in a former Junior medical class, is to be found in the 1907 edition of this publication, marks the advent of an era of increased intellectual activity among the upper classmen at the University.

While a few sporadic cases required more radical treatment, cures have been universally reported, and it is confidently expected that at the close of the present school year the Class of 1909 will be prepared to recommend to the present Sophomores the secret of absolute immunity from this dire contagion. It is hardly expected, however, that this discovery will become popular among present Seniors, on account of the not yet well understood physiological action of large doses required in such advanced cases. It is, of course, impossible to forecast the ultimate far reaching effects of this finding upon student life generally. It is no doubt to this discovery is directly traceable the stimulus to student effort which has characterized, especially, the latter half of the present session at the Medical Department of the University. This new order of thought has manifested itself in the formation of several societies looking to the consideration of subjects of vital import in the very most up-to-date and practical fashion, and one which promises well to become a potent factor at the University, and in which the enthusiasm of the student body is only equalled by the interest shown by the faculty and medical men generally, we introduce as "The J. Ford Thompson Surgical Society."

Whether it is the return to them, after a few years out of the woods, and in the light of what has been previously said regarding the origin of this awakening, of their earlier destructive proclivities, or whether being Hatchetites they have decided to revive those of their worthy ancestor, is not within the purpose of this article to speculate; but the inclination of a large number of '09 men for the knife was demonstrated recently in a fashion that justifies the prophecy that there is going to be "something doing." The organization of the J. Ford Thompson Surgical Society of George Washington University, Wednesday night, January 15, 1908, gives expression to the desire of the class generally for a clear, practical, and up-to-date understanding of the fundamental principles of the pathology, diagnosis and technique of modern surgery.

By unanimous vote the society incorporated into its own the name of one of the most eminent of present day surgeons, viz, J. Ford Thompson, who not only has done more than any other for the advancement of surgery in the University, but whose learning and skill has won for him the esteem of the medical profession and justly entitles him to the enviable reputation he enjoys. Dr. Thompson has expressed not only his interest in the organization of a surgical society in the University, but has assured it of his hearty cooperation, which at all times is most cordially solicited.

The scope of work contemplated by the society includes lectures on special subjects; report and discussion of cases; preparation and reading of papers; review and comparison of the latest methods of surgical procedure as told in current medical literature, and in a general way to keep in touch with surgery and avail itself of the opportunities of clinical diagnosis, etc., extant at the several hospitals and asylums of the District of Columbia, whereby a practical and working knowledge of surgery and its allied branches may be a possession in common to every medical student of the University.

The society represents the very best means of keeping in touch with the latest methods of surgical procedure and technique, which, in the very most recent text book publications must necessarily be from three to five years behind the times, and this it proposes to accomplish by a systematic inquiry of the best known medical records and comparison of reported cases with the text books studied. This feature was brought out with prominence and endorsed by the Dean of the University, Dr. W. F. R. Phillips, at the first meeting of the society, Wednesday night, January 29th. At this meeting also were discussed two valuable papers on the subjects of "Cerebral Compression" and "Leukocyte Count in Surgery."

Regular sessions will convene on each second and fourth Saturday nights of the month. The work for the remainder of the school year has already been well outlined and a number of attractive programs announced.

Active membership to the society is restricted to Junior and Senior medical students, and associate membership to graduates and undergraduates, of the George Washington University. Honorary membership may be conferred at the discretion of the society. Sophomores and Freshmen are warned that should they wander unbidden into any regular session of this society they shall, then and there, without excuse or murmur, submit their anatomy in the interests of surgery to whatever disposition may be discretionary with the society.

The Senior Council.

(Composed of Twelve Seniors in the Law School.)

By R. L. H.

SH-H-H-H! Just let me whisper it; and don't you ever tell anybody that it was written here—for this is to be the story of the Senior Council of the Law School!

Of all the secret, exclusive, "keep mum-and-sit-on-the-lid" organizations, this one, composed only of Seniors in the Law School, holds the palm leaf fan. Some of the wise ones say that one of its objects is to do good deeds in the Law School; but, of course, we can not say as to that. Its motto also might be "Never flunk," but even though it were, we wouldn't "dast" tell. One of the most mysterious features of this fraternity—if such it may be called—is its pin. Such a pin it is as would put to shame the awfullest scare-crow that ever graced a broomstick in an Illinois cornfield, and as would cause the grinniest goblin that ever infested the peaceful slumbers of us who used to be small boys, to flee and hide his wrinkled and hideous self behind the picture of our Great-Aunt Susan, high up on the wall. It (the pin,—not Aunt Susan) is composed of a skull, surmounted by a cocked hat with rosette ornamentation. To cap the climax, the thing has green emerald eyes; otherwise, however, it is not at all Irish. It may be worn in the necktie or by the girl friends of the councilors.

The Senior Council exists, we are told, in many of the large Eastern colleges and univerities. The roll of honor (that includes everybody, of course) is as follows, with the individual pictures of the members in 1908:

Athletics.

THE CHERRY TREE, in this issue, makes a slight departure from the precedent established by former years. A general survey of athletics, which could not be made in the articles devoted to the individual sports, seems necessary in order to give posterity a true idea of the crisis through which we have passed.

The Athletic Council was confronted by a peculiar and disheartening set of circumstances. In the fall of the college year no athletic field was at hand, because of the sale of Van Ness Park, and the consequent doubt as to its availability. A gloom was thus cast over football prospects which was only partially dispelled by the permission secured to use the field until December. This apparent lack of grounds, added to the numerous other handicaps under which the University labors, resulted in a small number of candidates, and the consequent cancelling of games with teams known throughout the country.

The football season was carried through, but by no means with the support the team merited. A financial loss ensued, which, with a disastrous baseball year, placed athletics on the debit side of the ledger to the extent of $1,200. Whether athletics would remain at George Washington, became the paramount question, and an appeal was made to the students to meet this deficit, if they did not wish athletics to go.

The answer came with satisfactory emphasis, and so the Athletic Council voted, unanimously, to continue football, basket-ball and track. As for a field, the Council decided to secure one on its own initiative.

Two innovations were made in the management of athletics. First, the position of graduate manager of athletics was created, carrying with it control over the various sports, subject to the Council. Second, membership in the Athletic Association, which formerly comprised the entire student body, was made subject to the payment of a fee, in compensation for certain privileges. One of these was the election of the managers for the different teams.

In view of the agitation in regard to athletics we feel justified in predicting an awakening interest on the part of the students. With only three sports to maintain and with an athletic association to insure financial support, the University can surely develop teams truly representative of George Washington. The issue, however, must be met by the students. With the barometer of their interest, our success in athletics will rise or fall. At present we are all optimists.

Review of the Season.

IN a review of the 1907 season the feature which stands preeminent is the game with Georgetown. Whether we won or lost other games makes slight difference, since we tied Georgetown. To do what no other George Washington team has ever accomplished, and that in a year fraught with discouragements, gives the men a niche in college history which succeeding generations can scarcely fail to respect. Many years were required, it is true, but the result lost none of its sweetness because of the time it has taken. And not the least meritorious was the hard, lasting, "fighting spirit" developed, a spirit which proved strong enough to hold the opposing line within our ten-yard mark. This final game was a fitting culmination to the trying season through which our squad passed in a manner that stamps every individual as a "man."

The majority of the members of the team were students employed in the day, who assembled at the field about 4:30 to go through an hour and a half of the football routine and then go home to study. To whip in shape a body of men in this ridiculously short time was a monumental task for the captain and coach and to learn the rudiments of the game a monumental task for the men. The effects, as could be expected, were the loss of the first three games, one of which, however, by no means reflecting on the squad. Swarthmore defeated us by a large score, but the surprising fact was that they mere unable to roll up more points than they did. Western Maryland in the first regular game of the season took revenge for former defeats by securing two touchdowns, while preventing us crossing her goal. Then, after the Swarthmore game, Maryland Agricultural College added a mark on the wrong side of our ledger in a fast and interesting game which they won by the score of 11-0.

University of Maryland proved the first victim to the rapidly developing team, when they were easily disposed of to the tune of 17-6. Gallaudet, which Georgetown had considerable difficulty in conquering, were compelled to satisfy themselves with one touchdown to our three. This contest was a true criterion of the relative strength of the two local teams, as the Thanksgiving game proved. Virginia Polytechnic Institute secured the largest score of the season against our men, partly due to the presence of five "subs" on our team.

With this record of two games won and four lost we prepared for the final contest, with a spirit that would admit of no defeat. Georgetown, though no more successful in their previous contests, displayed a confidence not in keeping with actual conditions, and received a shock for which we had been preparing many years.

A retrospect of the season, in the light of the future, brings nothing but satisfaction. With an established reputation, and with a strong nucleus of experienced men, the prospects for 1908 seem the best in our history.

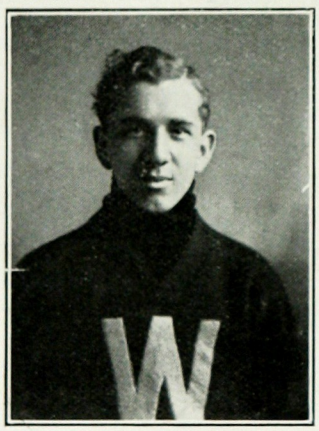
W. A. Sommers.

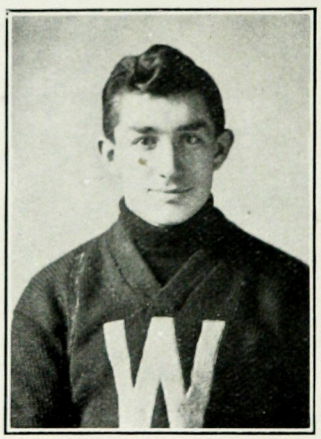
JAMES M. GUNNING, Engineering, 1909, born in Ohio, came from the Newport News High School, where he played center for two years, and St. Vincent's Academy, where he played guard. His good work at end for two years was recognized by his election as captain of the 1907 team. It is doubtful whether he will play next year. Age, 24. Height, 5 feet 9 inches. Weight, 168.

WALTER A. SOMMERS, Political Sciences, 1909, of Ohio, has taken an LL.M. at George Washington. This is his third year on the 'varsity. He has been elected captain for 1908, and expects to lead the best team ever sent out by the University. Age, 27. Height, 6 feet 3½ inches. Weight, 185.

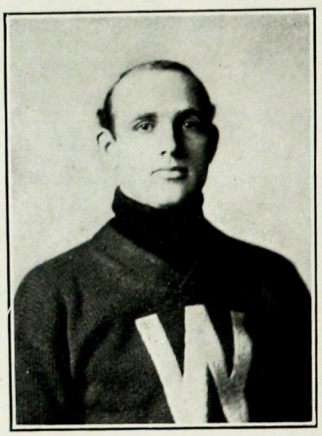
EUGENE M. BALL, manager, graduates from the Washington School of Engineering this year. He lives in the District, and graduated from the Western High School in 1904. Was assistant manager in 1906.



H. H. Pierce.



F. Crafts.

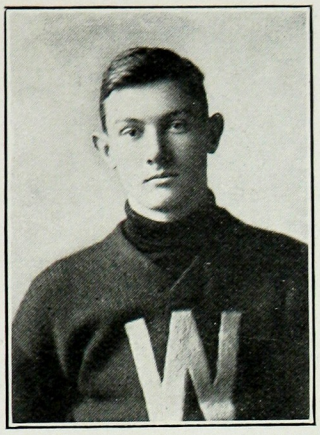


H. W. White

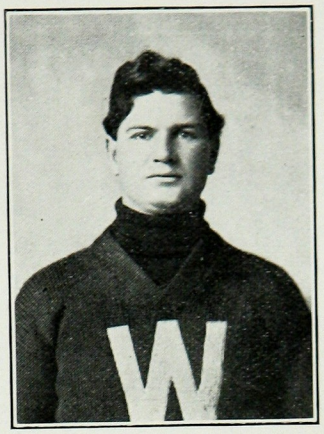
FREDERIC A. CRAFTS, Law, 1911, comes from New Hampshire. He graduated from the Milton High School, in Boston, where he played four years on the team, serving as captain in his Senior year. He is regarded as a coming star, and will be at his old position of half in 1908. Age, 24. Height, 5 feet 11½ inches. Weight, 165.

HARRY H. PEARCE, Law, 1910, hails from Michigan, where he attended the Albion College, playing quarter on the team. Made a plucky fight for quarter on the 'varsity and hopes to obtain his "W" again. Age, 24. Height, 5 feet 7½ inches. Weight, 135.

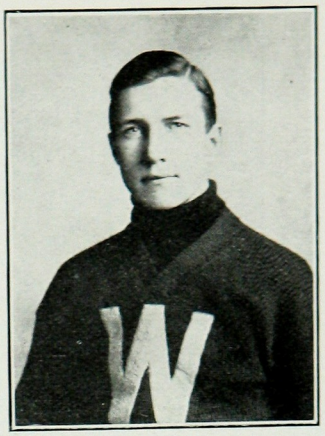
HERBERT W. WHITE, Law, 1910, is a citizen of Iowa, where he secured his sheepskin at Simpson College. Alternated at half and end. Will be with us next year. Age, 24. Height, 5 feet 8 inches. Weight, 150.



J. StC. Brookes.



P. D. Holmes.

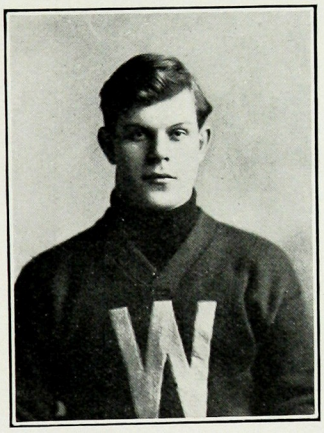


R. Maxcy.

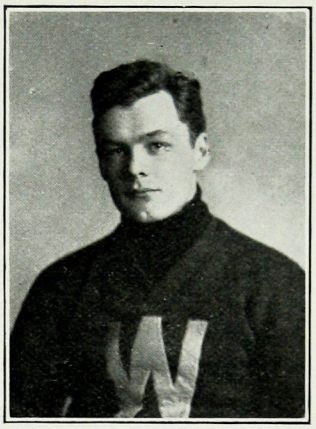
JOHN ST. CLAIR BROOKES, Law Department, is a citizen of the District. He graduated from Emerson Institute in 1903, and took an A.B. at George Washington in three years. Puts all his spirit into the game, and will make a star end next year. Age, 19. Height, 6 feet 1 inch. Weight, 163.

PATRICK D. HOLMES, Law, 1911, is a "Tar Heel." Though without experience, he made a splendid guard. Will strengthen the team wherever he is placed. Age, 25. Height, 5 feet 9 inches. Weight, 178.

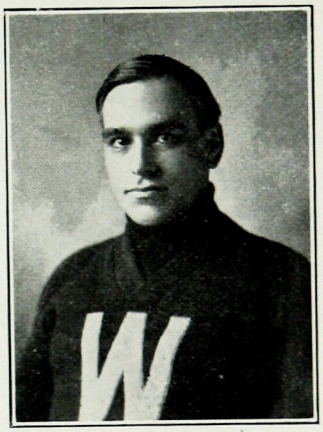
KENNETH MAXCY, College, 1911, born in Maine, graduated from the Central High School in 1907. Made a favorable impression at half and can be counted on to uphold his reputation next year. Age, 18. Height, 5 feet 10 inches. Weight, 157.



E. J. Hough.



P. R. Hooten.

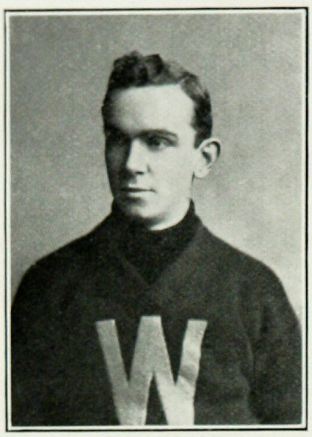


J. R. Whitehead.

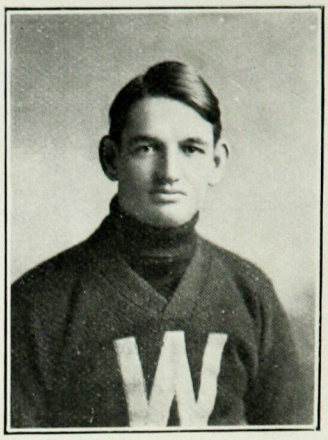
EDGAR J. HOUGH, Engineering, 1910, originally from Virginia, graduated from the Technical High School in 1905. Played a strong defensive half, and expects to try again next year. Age, 21. Height, 5 feet 7½ inches. Weight, 158.

PHILLIP R. HOOTEN, special in Architecture, born in New York, graduated from the Norfolk High School in 1906. Played an excellent game at half, but was injured towards the close of the season. Will be here next year. Age, 20. Height, 6 feet. Weight, 175.

JOHN R. WHITEHEAD, post-graduate in Political Sciences, of Ohio, graduated from Purdue in 1904. He is expected to duplicate his success at tackle in 1908. Age, 29. Height, 5 feet 7 inches. Weight, 160.



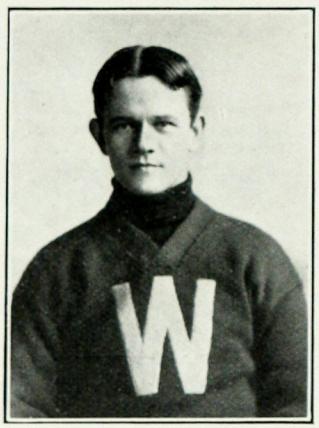
AUBREY B. WITTEN.



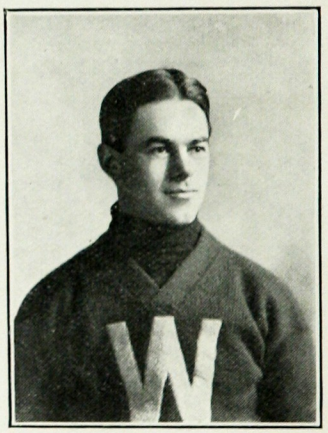
L. ROYAL ALSTON.

AUBREY B. WITTEN, special in Architecture, of Missouri, graduated from Emerson Institute. Played fullback on the 'varsity and did all the punting. Returns next year. Age, 22. Height, 6 feet ¾ inch. Weight, 165.

L. ROYAL ALSTON, of Louisiana, graduated from the Lake Charles High School, where he played three years on the team. Is taking engineering work, and is expected back next year to strengthen the line. Age, 20. Height, 6 feet 3 inches. Weight, 187.



MORRIS K. HARRALSON.



J. EARLE BAKER.

MORRIS K. HARRALSON, post-graduate in Law, graduated from the Boys' High School, Atlanta, and George Washington Law School. Played two years on the 'varsity, at center. Will not return. Age, 24. Height, 5 feet 7 inches. Weight, 162.

J. EARLE BAKER, post-graduate in Political Sciences, comes from Wisconsin, where he took a Ph.B. degree at the University of Wisconsin. Played fullback and center on George Washington. Will not return. Age, 26. Height, 5 feet 9½ inches. Weight, 152.

THE fourth year of the existence of a track team in the University was ushered in by a meet, the first given by George Washington. This latter was noticeable for several reasons. First, as we have mentioned, it was the initial event of its kind under the auspices of this institution. Second, it had the largest number of entries, with one exception, of any meet ever given in the South. And third, it was carried through without loss to the management.

The successful execution of these games marks a forward step, not only in track athletics but also in athletics as a whole. It proved that George Washington has become recognized as an institution of importance in sporting matters, and that an enterprise promulgated under the name of George Washington carries with it a large amount of prestige because of the name. Enough interest was expressed by several prominent colleges and clubs to insure a larger and better meet for 1909.

TRACK TEAM

The one disappointing feature of the games was the small number of entries from the University itself. This can be attributed, however, to the same causes that hindered basketball: Lack of training quarters, and a late call for candidates. Nevertheless, several points were secured in various local meets by George Washington men. "Jack" Sterrett, in particular, managed to win a place in every pole vault he entered, at one time coming within three-fourths of an inch of the Southern indoor record, by leaping 11 feet 1 inch.

Of the four relays participated in this year, George Washington won two. The first, one mile against Virginia in the George Washington Meet, was lost by a short distance, after an exciting race. In the same meet, Johns Hopkins walked away with the two-mile event, though it must be remembered that Fleming ran in both the one and two mile relays. At Baltimore, the team had little difficulty in defeating Catholic University, but were disqualified on an alleged foul. The matter, at present, is under protest. A week later, at the Johns Hopkins Games, we won again, against the same four, Fleming, Brame, Sterrett and Claggett constituting the team.

This summary would not be complete without the record made last year after "The Mall" went to press. George Washington carried everything before it in the Southern Intercollegiate Championships, held at the University of Virginia. Lorando, who has left the University, performed the remarkable feat of winning the 440, 880 and mile events, of which one, the half mile, was run in record time. Sterrett won places in some dozen meets, securing third in the national intercollegiate championships at Jamestown.

Our list of honors is therefore by no means small. With the strong nucleus remaining, and with sufficient time for training, we can look for renewed efforts on the part of the track team to add to its glory in 1909.

THE success won by the University last year in basketball was not maintained this season. Nevertheless, the team is to be complimented on its perseverance and hard work. Success cannot be measured alone by the number of victories. The fact that, despite lack of training, new material and repeated defeats, the team played its entire schedule is a source of satisfaction that cannot be overlooked. In addition, it is pleasant to contemplate that the management came out financially solvent.

Beginning with Yale, December 31, the string of defeats continues through the second game with Virginia, on February 29. Some of the contests were pretty close, and in these cases our men several times threatened their opponents. Many of the games were lost through misfortune; the illness of Captain Johnson, for instance, was a material handicap to the team.

In a more optimistic light, we can safely claim that our men worked hard and conscientiously. At no time did they evidence an inclination to "quit." The teams they encountered were merely better, in many cases heavier and more experienced. Composed almost entirely of raw material, the quint showed up well. Rutherford, Twyeffort and Rehr, all of the '08 Law, with a year's more experience would have made a strong combination. We had two strong men in Johnson and Covell, of the 1907 Championship quint. These, with Marsh, Hehr and Manager Biddle, who will be out with the squad next year, will form an excellent nucleus for 1908.

THE ENOSINIAN SOCIETY, founded in 1822, and now in its 86th year of activity, was founded by the students of Columbian College to promote interest in debating, parliamentary procedure and literary pursuits.

The meetings are held on alternate Fridays at 8:30 p. m. in the Administration Building. At each meeting, exclusive of election nights, there is held a regular debate. The members of the society are assigned by the society six weeks previous to the debate. There are three speakers on a side. The debaters choose the question for debate, which is announced two weeks in advance of the contest. The judges are chosen by the presiding officer from the members of the society. With the close of the formal debate opportunity is given for a general discussion of the question by the other members of the society.

In addition to the debate, two papers are read at each meeting by editors elected for that purpose. The older paper, the Bee, has been published since the founding of the society. The other, the News, was started in 1875. These papers, as a rule, are in lighter vein and provide much entertainment and amusement for the members.

TWENTY years ago there was no Columbian Debating Society. It was in the year 1889 that the Columbian Debating Society was founded. So for nineteen years it has prospered, giving to its supporters a much-needed opportunity to learn the art of speaking and thinking while standing before an audience. Today those whose names are on its roll-book, and whose voices have been heard in its halls, are scattered far and wide over this country, making use of the practical knowledge acquired while debating "reciprocity," the "trusts" and other old stand-bys. And nine men started this Society whose roll-call numbers hundreds at the present time! Two of the signers of the first constitution of the Columbian Society are now professors in the Law School of this University: Walter C. Clephane and John Paul Earnest. Many others might be named who have gone from this Society into the world and made their names known.

This present year will see the exit of a goodly part of the members of Columbian; but those who remain, together with those who will later join the Society, will keep up the standard of debating which the Columbian Debating Society expects from its members. May the Society do as much good to those who support it in the future as it has done good to those who have supported it in the past!

THE Needham Debating Society is the youngest debating organization in the University, but it is a "big boy" ready to do its just share of work. Our older rivals, the Enosinian and Columbian Societies, will vouch for this, as will our record,—a majority of victories in the inter-society debates with each of these societies. Some of the best debaters in the Law School have been members of the Needham,—men who have helped build the reputation of our Alma Mater as the most successful debating university in the South.

But the accomplishments of Needham men do not end with debating. Our membership includes many athletes of national prominence. Crane holds the world's record for the standing broad smile. Then there is Pearce, the 'varsity quarter, who at the close of each meeting discards the conventional "I move we adjourn, sir," for the more modern "23, skidoo." Another athlete is Baker, center on the football team, who deals in charts, statistics, and graceful figures—of speech. There are many characters among us. Patterson, the rapid fire, automatic talker, always believes in driving his arguments (and, incidentally, his listeners) home. The gentleman from Utah, Jensen, is reputed to be a second Sidney Straphanger. At every meeting he gives a demonstration of the most successful street car poses. Our full-blooded Injun, John Tecumseh, goes after the scalps of his opponents with a hatchet (Tecumseh considers the tomahawk out of date). Little Jack Horner objects to prohibition on the sole ground that brandy is an essential ingredient of mince pie. But we must not forget our humorist and poet, Jones, who reached the zenith of his fame when he wrote the following description of a meeting, while Stein was vice-president:

It's jolly good weather,
When good fellows get together,
With a Stein on the platform,
And the President's not there.

It is said that this flash of literary genius landed Jones the presidency, but that ever thereafter his relations with the Stein were somewhat strained. In addition there are Ambrose, our President, champion twister of the Eagle's tail; Rowe, the famous archæologist; Sunderlin, the whirlwind orator of the "breezy west;" Nyemaster, an oily politician of the standard brand, and many others.

The above conclusively demonstrates that it is a privilege to be a member of the Needham Society, and a greater one to be presnt at its meetings. We are not exclusive, however, and our latch-string is always out. Although our meetings are well attended, we can always find room for more, since we meet in University Hall (capacity 300). Drop in. It is worth while.

The University Congress.

With the example of the Congress of the United States so close at hand it seems but natural and fitting that a miniature Congress should be formed; that the University Congress should flourish and hold its own in the student body of George Washington University.

Governed by the same rules, swayed by the same eloquence, divided by party lines as rigid, the University Congress enacts its laws with as great a display of interest and spirit as is to be found in the larger body—the Congress of the United States.

Its good effects can hardly be overrated. Its members become skilful debaters, quick to think and to reply; they become familiar with the most complicated parliamentary rulings and gain a training and poise which make it possible to avoid that bugbear of so many young lawyers—stage-fright. The groundwork for the career of many a brilliant orator and able statesman will unconsciously be laid in just this way and in just this place. With its gathering of so many bright young minds it tends toward the greater tolerance of opinions in others and affords a chance for the assimilating of much valuable information and the sharpening of wits against the steel of other wits.

Its meeting, held the year round give no chance for growing rusty, and the fact that all students are eligible to membership give it an all-round University character much to its credit.

Its leaders for the past year have been able men, untiring in their devotion to the interests of the members, and to them personally is due much of the success of the Congress.

The good works of this Congress will go on in the University while its influence upon the men who have gone out into the world strengthened by its aid will be wide and far-reaching. In the days to come, without doubt, some great statesman will proudly trace the awakening of his talents to the days in the University Congress at George Washington.

Elixir Babek

A CURE FOR MALARIA, FOUNDED ON SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES

The malaria parasite attacks the red blood corpuscle and grows and divides within it to form 10 to 20 Gametes or Sporocytes, the red cell ruptures and these are discharged into the blood stream at the time of the chill. The Gametes immediately attack other red blood cells and the process is repeated. BABEK will destroy the malaria parasite at all stages of development.
